Increase Is Six Cents Over Levels Current in the World.

Action Due Today Upon 16-to-1 Bill

Roosevelt Move Made as Senate Body Lists Wheeler Measure.

By Robert C. Albright.

By executive proclamation, President Roosevelt last night raised the Treasury's price for newly mined domestic silver to 71 cents an ounce, an increase of more than 6 cents over current world levels.

The announcement came as the Senate Agriculture Committee scheduled action today on a revised Wheeler silver bill, providing mandatory purchase of silver, looking to a silver ratio of 16 to 1, or an ultimate price of $2.18 an ounce for the white metal.

Earlier, Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, Senate expansionist leader, called on prominent economists of the so-called sound money school for their stabilization views. His statement came as a distinct surprise. Heretofore, Thomas had cooperated almost exclusively with advocates of his own expansionist ideas.

World Prices Climb.

The President's silver proclamation was preceded by a rapid climb in world prices of silver, which yesterday approximated the domestic level. The action may have a slightly leavening effect on commodity prices. Because of the relatively small volume of domestically mined silver, this influence can not be great, although it carries mildly inflationary possibilities.

To what extent the proclamation might be designed to head off congressional silver movements, largely directed at a higher domestic silver price and increased Treasury purchases, could not be ascertained.

Even though more active Senate silverites went right ahead with mandatory silver purchase plans, they greeted with expressions of satisfaction an earlier announcement by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that "we are ready to meet whatever the world price is on silver." Thomas pointed out that if the price were not raised, domestic miners would discontinue sales to the Government.

President Roosevelt had hinted at the action during a morning press conference, advising reporters to watch developments after the London or Montreal silver price went above 64½ cents an ounce. Later Treasury Department legal experts were summoned into conference and the proclamation ensued.

Payment by the Treasury of a premium for domestic newly mined silver was inaugurated December 21, 1933, pursuant to the provisions of the Pittman silver agreement reached the previous July at the London Economic and Monetary Conference. Under the Pittman pact the United States Government agreed to buy approximately 24,000,000 ounces of silver annually for four years. This figure was approximately the American production for 1932.

The first price paid for newly mined silver by the Treasury was

To First Radio Thriller, 'What Would You Do?'

The solution of the first thrilling "What Would You Do?" real life dramas broadcast at 5:30 p. m. from WJEJ, Hagerstown, Md., follows:

Judge Bovard heard his son's story in detail. No course, other than to turn Harry over to the authorities, presented itself to him. Harry was tried for murder.

Dr. Lawton, the celebrated psychiatrist, and Dr. Thompson, the psychologist for the State, sat conversing quietly in a corner of the courtroom, as the jury filed in to render a verdict.

The courtroom was death-still. No murmur broke the ominous quiet. "Gentlemen of the jury," Judge Wilson spoke, "have you agreed on a verdict in the case of Harry Bovard?"

The foreman arose. "We have, your honor."

"What is your verdict?"

"We—the jury—find the defendant, Harry Bovard, guilty of murder in the first degree——"

A woman's bitter sobbing pierced the stillness of the room.

"But," the foreman continued, "in view of evidence introduced by Dr. Lawton and Dr. Thompson—that the prisoner is suffering from a definite form of maniac depressive insanity, we recommend that the prisoner be committed to the psychiatric ward of the State hospital—for life."

Headsman's Ax Beats Prelude To Pomp of Goering Nuptials

Hitler's Aid, Actress Wed in Brilliant Setting; Deaths Unheeded.

By the United Press.

Berlin, April 10.—Eight hours after the headsman's ax had fallen on two enemies of the Nazi state, Berlin ran riot with romance today at the wedding of Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering and Emmi Sonnemann, blonde actress of the State Theater.

The day was a study in contrasts. At daybreak, Salli Epstein, a Jew, and Hans Ziegler, an Aryan, were dragged into the courtyard of Ploetzensee Prison and beheaded before a few officials for the "political murder" of Horst Wessel, national hero.

Few paid much heed to the day's grim prelude—for this was a day of romantic pageantry to celebrate the marriage of Der Fuehrer's right-hand man to a beautiful fraulein of the footlights. Reichsfuehrer Hitler himself was best man.

The ceremony had everything to delight a sentimental populace—a bridegroom who was a World War flying hero, Prussian premier, air minister and general of the newly revealed air force—a bride famous for her beauty—a ceremony in which the dictator himself passed the ring and Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller performed the religious ceremony—a street procession while 78 military airplanes roared overhead—and to top is all a new uniform upon Goering, that of general of the air force.

Defying superstition, the stocky general drove with his bride to city hall for the brief civil ceremony by Burgomeister Heinrich Sahm. Their car was laden with flowers. Behind them rode Hitler and Hans Kefrl, minister without portfolio.

Cheering thousands lined streets from the general's official residence to the city hall.

8 Closed Banks Here May Pay Full Deposits

Receivers Give Hope That D. C. Patrons Will Get 100%.

The possibility that depositors in eight of the largest insolvent banks here will receive 100 per cent of their money was seen last night when estimated values of remaining assets in the banks were made public for the first time.

The eight banks, when closed, had deposits in excess of $32,000,000 and have since paid off anywhere from 50 to 85 per cent of their deposit liabilities.

Receiver Cary A. Hardee of the Federal-American National Bank reported that together with the cash on hand, and collection of a little more than a third of the remaining assets, a 100 per cent payment will be possible. This bank carried with it about a fourth of the total deposits involved in all 19 local bank failures. He estimated that in addition to the $912,808 on hand he expects to collect $3,659,139 of the total remaining assets set at $9,880,114. The bank has already paid a 50 per cent dividend.

2 Million at Commercial.

The Commercial National Bank, which is being administered by Robert C. Baldwin, shows promise of paying a 25 per cent dividend at an early date with possibility of considerably more, if only half of the available book assets are collected. A 50 per cent dividend has paid depositors in excess of $2,789,500. There remain approximately $5,968,558 in book assets, although the receiver's estimate of the collectible portion is about $2,471,683. After payment of an outstanding RFC loan there will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 available for dividends. This figure will be increased if the receiver's estimate of collectible assets is conservative and a larger portion of the book assets are realized.

The Chevy Chase Savings Bank, also under the supervision of Re-

Message Seen Roosevelt Plan To Stop Bonus

Robinson Hints at Word for Senate on Visit to White House.

A White House message on the bonus, presumably to head off Senate approval of the cash payment bill voted by the House, last night was forecast by the Senate Democratic leader, Joseph T. Robinson, following a lengthy conference with the President.

"I think it is generally recognized that the subject of the bonus must be considered," said the Senate leader, as he left the White House.

"It may be that the President will decide to send to the Senate a message on the subject within a comparatively short time."

The statement coincided with another by Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, that his group will do nothing about the bonus until he has conferred with the President.

President Reported Pleased.

Robinson said the bonus was only incidental to a general White House discussion of conditions and pending legislation.

"I feel that very satisfactory progress is being made and the President assures me that he has the same opinion," said the Senate leader.

After weeks of acrimonious debate on the works bill, the Administration's legislative program appeared badly snarled when President Roosevelt returned from his fishing cruise.

Committees have moved more swiftly since then. Within the last 48 hours, three Administration measure—increased HOLC capitalization, AAA licensing amendments and motor carriers control legislation—have been reported to the Senate.

Clamor from veterans' interests for Senate bonus action, meanwhile, continued, despite frank statements that the President would veto either the Patman inflationary cash bonus

Store Business Here Better, U. S. Commerce Survey Finds

Moderate improvement in some lines of business and industry was reported by the Department of Commerce yesterday in its weekly survey, covering 30 cities.

Most cities reported definite gains in bank clearings and in retail trade over the preceding week and the corresponding period of last year.

A survey of Washington business appeared for the first time in the report.

Despite unfavorable weather, department stores in Washington showed consistent gains in sales, showing an increase of 8.7 per cent over the previous week and 18.7 per cent over the corresponding week last year. Bank clearings increased 29.8 per cent over the previous week and 21.4 per cent over the same week last year.

The telephone company reported an increase of 306 installations, as compared with 241 for the previous week and 224 for the same week last year.

Doubled CCC Decided Upon By Roosevelt

Quick Spending of Relief Funds Is Promised; Pledges No Delay.

Most Projects Must Be Done by July, '36, President Says.

With the expressed hope of saving some of his $4,880,000,000 works fund if conditions improve, President Roosevelt yesterday began a series of conferences to help him decide how much should be allocated among existing Government agencies.

As far as possible, he declared, all of the money that is disbursed will be spent on projects which will be completed by July 1, 1936, although in some cases expenditures necessarily will lapse over into the following fiscal year.

The great bulk of the works program, he emphasized, will be handled by Federal agencies already in operation. How much will be spent will depend, he indicated, on the progress to recovery. At all events, a peak in expenditures is looked for in November.

To Double CCC.

The CCC, which was the President's first relief measure after his inaugural two years ago, again was the first to draw his attention. Robert Fechner, director of the civilian foresters, headed a steady procession of callers into the President's oval workroom.

With him, Fechner took plans for virtual doubling of the Conservation Corps, increasing the number of camps from 1,468 to 2,916 and expanding enlisted personnel to 600,000. The CCC is given $600,000,000 under the work-relief act, but even more than this amount may be spent, it was indicated.

Mr. Roosevelt's remarks on the works program were made at his first press conference since Congress gave to the White House the huge relief fund to put 3,500,000 people to work in a year. Bronzed by two weeks of Southern sunshine, he smilingly replied to random questions, asserting in opening that there will be no delay in getting the program under way.

He declared that plans will go forward although he has not determined on the exact nature of the central organization which will advise with him on allocations from the fund. Various such plans for coordinating the works program are now before him, but so far Mr. Roosevelt has not seen fit to adopt any one of them.

At the same time Mr. Roosevelt warned against expecting immediate results, pointing out that in the case of the CCC new camps must be built before the rolls are opened for new enlistments. The CCC will require more than $800,000,000, he said, because its period of operation under the works act will be more than a year.

As far as possible, New York projects will be located in areas of heavy unemployment to prevent the necessity of providing housing, the President said. He explained that in most cases workers will be within a 30-mile bus distance from their jobs.

Meantime, Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins announced that States and local communities will contribute $154,883,000 more to the relief load this year than in 1934. He estimated the total of State and local contributions in 1935 at $563,775,000.

Million From Virginia.

"This sizable increase in the cooperative share that States and localities will pay," Hopkins said, "is the result of individual agreements worked out between the FERA and the States. In a majority of cases, now, the State and local money has been definitely allocated for relief purposes, either by legislation or executive action."

Virginia and Virginia communities are expected to put up $5,000,000 this year, as compared with

Dust Storms Force Flight Of Hundreds

New Disaster's Toll in 8 States in Millions; Traffic Blocked.

Typhoid Epidemic Fear as Floods Sweep Kentucky.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 10.—Grimy wagons and motor cars carried scores of families out of northwestern Oklahoma tonight in full flight from an eight-State dust storm—among the most severe of a devastating series.

Crop and live-stock damages, already piled high in uncounted millions, increased rapidly, principally in Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado, parts of New Mexico, Iowa, Nebraska and Texas also were hit.

Many schools and stores were closed in Colorado and Kansas. The business district at Scott City, Kans., was shut down for the third consecutive day.

More than 100 families have deserted Cimarron and Texas counties in the northwestern Oklahoma Panhandle. Chester Lamar, FERA administrator, said that 100 "normally self-sustaining" families have left Texas County alone within the last 30 days.

Graphic Tales Told.

The Oklahoma refugees told graphically of their distress.

"I'm trying to get some place where my children can at least live," said Mrs. Lydia Dower, of Hardesty, today as she drove away by truck with her three children for Colorado. Atop the truck was the family goat.

"I had no chance to raise a crop here," explained Roy Woods, of Texhoma, as he set out for Utah.

"This farm is the fruit of my labor ever since my wife and I married 28 years ago," said T. A. Foster, of Texhoma, "but we are going to leave it. Fortunately, I inherited a farm in Linn County, Kans., where we can go."

Floyd Hudson, member of the corn-hog committee in Cimarron County, said the dust has driven out all but three of the 40 families who once lived in the six townships south of Boise City, Okla.

Attributing conditions to the dust, Mrs. Mabel Lathrop, relief worker at Guymon, said 4,000 of the 5,500 families in six northwestern Oklahoma counties are on relief rolls.

All "Heading East."

"We're heading East," was all many of the occupants of 36 truckloads of furniture sighted today between Guymon and Boise City would say.

Lacy Rankin, of Hardesty, Okla., set out for California with his wife and children, saying:

"We feared for the family's health if we stayed here. We couldn't make a go here, anyway, and we couldn't be worse off anywhere else."

Tom Blake, of Hardesty, lamented that "my family almost smothers to death every time there is a storm."

But the Colorado to which Blake is going also reported more dust today. The fifth dust storm in five days swirled over Lamar, causing the dismissal of schools and the closing of stores at noon.

Schools Closed.

Every school in Baca County, Colorado, was closed. One hundred and eighty school children and passengers on buses prepared to spend their second night at Pritchet, Colo., in a school building and nearby homes.

Springfield (Colo.) stores exhausted their supplies of sponges, sought as "dust masks." Trains in the region were compelled to stop frequently. One arrived 12 hours late. A truck driver required 5½ hours to drive 50 miles to Lamar.

Kansas, where dust has been spinning in low-hanging clouds for more than a month, was virtually blanketed in today's storm.

Crop statisticians presented a pic-

Protest Grows as President Upholds Cotton Process Tax

Roosevelt Refuses to Pay Benefits From Work Relief Funds; to Continue Crop Loans; Manufacturers Move to Brazil.

Growing agitation against the Administration's cotton program was intensified yesterday after President Roosevelt refused the plea of Southern congressional leaders that the cotton processing tax be removed and the benefits to growers be paid out of the $4,880,000,000 work relief fund.

Senator Walter F. George, of Georgia, led a delegation of Southern Senators and representatives to the White House a few hours later to urge the Executive to grant relief that would "save" the cotton and textile industries.

It also became known that a group of New England Governors will call on the President tomorrow with a similar plea. They will previously hold a meeting with the entire New England delegation in Congress.

At the same time there came confirmation of reports here that cotton goods manufacturers are moving machinery and employes to Brazil in order to profit from the lower cotton and other costs there. Russell E. Watson, vice president and general manager of Johnson & Johnson, manufacturers of surgical dressings, notified the Senate finance committee that that firm is to open a plant in Brazil to supply markets heretofore served from this country.

Although losing on their plea to remove the cotton processing tax, the Southerners won 1 point as a result of their visit to the President. Chairman Smith of the Senate Agriculture Committee said the Administration, "between now and Saturday," will announce that 12-cents-a-pound loans on cotton will be continued this year. Since the break in the cotton market several weeks

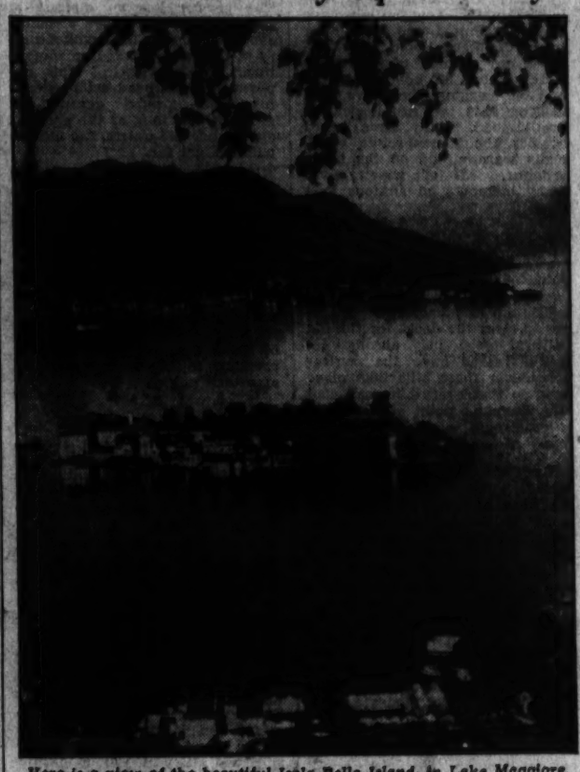
Views on Security Split As Three Powers Meet At Stresa Parley Today

Where 'Peace Parley' Opens Today



Here is a view of the beautiful Isola Bella Island, in Lake Maggiore, Italy, where the long-heralded three-power Stresa conference starts today.

Italy Seeks Guard on Reich Arms; France in Mid-Position.

'No Commitments' British Tell U. S.

Simon Informs Bingham Aim Only Is to Explore Grounds for Peace.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Stresa, April 10.—Decided differences of opinion among the British, French and Italian delegations as to the best way of insuring Europe against war were indicated tonight on the eve of their conference here, regarded as the most important since the World War.

While the three powers are agreed upon accepting Germany's rearmament and upon the necessity of getting the Reich into some system of nonaggression and security, they were authoritatively reported sharply at odds as to the methods to be followed.

Great Britain and Italy, the best-informed quarters said, are at opposite extremes, with the French somewhere in between, but probably closer to Britain.

[Great Britain assured the United States today that she considers the Stresa talk "purely explanatory." Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon told United States Ambassador Robert W. Bingham that Britain intends to make no commitments.—Editor's Note.]

Mussolini Prepares.

Premier Benito Mussolini, host to the conference, spent the afternoon and evening isolated on Isola Bella Island, conference headquarters, going over his plan of action for tomorrow with Fulvio Suvich, his undersecretary for foreign affairs.

Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, of France, arrived at 10:35 p. m. to be greeted with warm handshakes by Mussolini and Suvich.

Hundreds of soldiers guarded the station and nearby streets. After Mussolini's brief greeting a band played the French national anthem and the soldiers presented arms.

The two premiers then passed the troops in review, after which Flandin and Laval drove to their hotel through crowds of villagers.

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon, Britain's chief conferees, were speeding down from Paris aboard the Simplon-Orient express. They spent three hours in the French capital, to which they flew from London. They will reach Stresa tomorrow morning.

The three delegations, information available this evening indicated, looked upon the parley thus:

Great Britain—A ground for discussion in the course of which some plan may be reached for bringing Germany into an agreement for collective security and back into the League of Nations.

Italy—An opportunity to reach an accord among the three powers, perhaps an alliance, with which to face Germany in case Adolf Hitler refuses to enter the proposed collective agreement.

British Argument.

France—A chance for reconciling the Italian position, which she prefers, with the British, from which she is not inclined to move far.

An authoritative spokesman said the British argument is as follows:

"Stresa should prepare the way for a larger conference in which

Gag on Social Bill Defeated; Liberals to Wage Floor Fight

Decision to Request Open Rule in House Follows Stormy Committee Session; Final Vote Seen 2 or 3 Weeks Away; McGroarty Fears "Trick."

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Fears of Democratic leaders that they would be repudiated yesterday caused abandonment of plans to gag the House on social security.

Democrats and Republicans heckled each other unmercifully at a meeting of the Rules Committee. Chairman O'Connor later was instructed to ask the House today for a rule permitting amendments from the floor.

O'Connor also will recommend 20 hours' debate before amendments are considered under a rule limiting speeches to 5 minutes. The House probably will adopt the procedure he recommends and begin working on the measure at once. A final vote appeared two or three weeks off.

The procedure decided on was expected to precipitate the most protracted debate of the session. Advocates of the Townsend $200-a-month pension scheme and other radicals were pleased that an outright gag was not attempted.

However, Representative McGroarty (Democrat), California, who introduced a bill carrying the Townsend plan, hinted his followers might seek to defeat or amend the rule for fear that under its terms their proposal could be ruled out of order as not germane because of its tax provisions.

"It sounds nice the way the rule is written," he said. "At first glance it seems to be a generous open rule, but it isn't. They're pretty smart."

Despite McGroarty's complaint, it was believed the rule would lead to House votes on numerous amendments opposed by the Administration.

Included in that category would be the efforts to require the Federal Government to pay $30 a month instead of $15 to all needy persons over 65, and excuse the States from paying anything; an amendment to raise the Federal contribution to the needy aged from $15 to $20, $25 or more, even if the States still were required to match Uncle Sam; an amendment to eliminate entirely the provisions for supplemental compulsory old-age pensions to be paid through pay roll taxes totaling 6 per cent, and an amendment to drastically revise the moderate unemployment insurance benefits by substituting the Lundeen bill, which would call for payment of the prevailing wage scale to all jobless.

Neutrality Plan Pushed by Hull And Roosevelt

Secretary's Report Almost Due; Filipino Trade Parley Outlined.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Indicating a renewed interest in efforts to keep this country out of war, President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday surveyed possible steps the United States might take now to make its neutrality invulnerable in the event of a conflict abroad.

Mr. Hull reported to the President the progress and nature of the investigation into neutrality policies which the State Department has been making for almost a year. If any decisions were reached, they were not announced, except that the President is known to be keenly interested in having a neutrality program formulated at this time.

Secretary Hull also gave the President the latest information regarding the European situation, laying before him a report from American Ambassador Robert W. Bingham outlining the attitude the British will take at the Stresa conference on the question of European security.

Ambassador Bingham previously had conferred with Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, prior to his departure for the Stresa conference. Although the United States will not actively participate in the Stresa meeting, every move on the European chessboard is be-

Cuba Rounds Up 20 Suspects In $300,000 Kidnaping Case

By the United Press.

Havana, Cuba, April 10.—Havana police tonight had seized 20 suspects in connection with the kidnaping of Eutimo Falla Bonnet, Cuban capitalist, who was released after the payment of a $300,000 ransom.

Since Falla's release, his family has received two anonymous letters threatening them with death unless police withdraw the case. Police guards have been assigned to the family.

Last Wednesday night a group of men seized Falla in his automobile in the suburb of Vedado and rushed him to a house where he was held until the ransom money was paid. It represents one of the largest ransom payments on record.

Among the suspects arrested by police today was a woman, Isolina Castro. She was seized when she allegedly attempted to deposit six $100 bills bearing serial numbers of the ransom bills at a local branch of the National City Bank. The

Post's Comics In Post Only

Rights to Four Features Made Exclusive by Permanent Writ.

The permanent injunction under which The Washington Post is entitled to print exclusively in this city the four celebrated comic strips, "The Gumps," "Dick Tracy," "Winnie Winkle" and "Gasoline Alley," formally was issued yesterday by the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia.

These popular comic features will appear daily and Sunday in this newspaper only, under the terms of the injunction, which bars them from the Washington Herald. This marks the final legal step in this district in the long litigation climaxed by the refusal of the United States Supreme Court on Monday to grant the Washington Times Co., publisher of the Herald, a writ of certiorari. The writ was sought in a final effort to reverse the ruling of the United States Court of Appeals for this district, which held that The Post was entitled to the injunction insuring exclusive publication in this district of the four comics.

In consequence of the action of the highest court, the mandate of the Court of Appeals went forward by the usual legal processes to the lower court, which, in turn, issued the final injunction yesterday.

Senate Turns On Lobbyists With New Bill

Hearings Set on Measure to Compel Registration of 'Contact Men.'

By the Associated Press.

The Senate yesterday turned on the lobbyists who pester it, year in and year out, by scheduling hearings on a bill which would require annual registration of those who make a business of trying to influence Congress or Government departments.

A Senate Judiciary sub-committee headed by Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, with Senators Norris (Republican), of Nebraska, and Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, as members, will conduct the hearings. Some of the National Capital's scores of legislative and departmental "contact" men probably will be called as witnesses.

Announcement of the inquiry recalled the ten months' lobby investigation by the Caraway committee several years ago. It developed headlines and several proposals for legislation that were never pressed.

The present bill, by Senator Black (Democrat), of Alabama, would require all persons trying to "influence" Congress or Government departments and employes "upon any matter" to register with the Senate and House, if lobbying at the Capitol, and with the Federal Trade Commission, if before departments.

The lobbyists also would be required to file under oath monthly reports of their activities, including money received and expended, for what purpose, names of persons contacted, and a list of periodicals in which any articles or editorials were caused to be published.

Lobbyists failing to register would be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of $5,000 and a year in prison. Those making a false affidavit would be guilty of perjury and upon conviction could be imprisoned for two years.

The bill defines "lobbyists" as an effort to influence Congress, or a Federal bureau "upon any matter coming before it, whether it be by distributing literature, appearing before committees of Congress, interviewing or seeking to interview individual members of either House of Congress, appearing before or interviewing bureaus, Federal agencies or employes, preparing and causing to be published articles in newspapers, magazines, books or pamphlets for a consideration paid by persons, partnerships, associations or corporations financially interested in securing or defeating Federal legislation, or financially interested in defeating or obtaining official action by any Federal bureau, agency, official or employe."

Early Congress Recess Dashed; Roosevelt Backs AAA Tax; Hoffman a G. O. P. Hope.

By Raymond Clapper

Hopes of Senators and Representatives for an early getaway went down yesterday when President Roosevelt indicated he wished the bulk of the legislative "white list" put through before the summer recess.

They had hoped that Congress was so unpopular with Mr. Roosevelt that he would try to get them out of the way early by letting some of this controversial legislation go over until next winter. What's bothering Senators and Representatives is the election next year. They want to get home and work on constituents. Two years ago you couldn't drive them out of Washington. Constitutents were hounding them for jobs. The safest hideout was in Washington. Now the jobs have been distributed and it is safer to appear back home. Furthermore, any number of Democrats were elected by none too comfortable margins. They have been hearing that the Administration has slipped. Many have heard rumors about prospective opponents warming up on the home grounds. All of which gives many members an anxious look these days.

But Mr. Roosevelt seems in no hurry to let them go. He has plans of his own. He wants to dispose of as much controversial legislation as possible now in order to clear the decks for the big political year just ahead. He would rather have the controversy over these bills take place now, so that everything can cool off. From his point of view that is preferable to projecting these fights on the eve of the campaign.

Mr. Roosevelt came back from Florida tougher, he said yesterday, than he was a year ago. He wants the NRA extension, social security legislation, holding company control, revised banking legislation, new ship subsidy legislation and extension of nuisance taxes which otherwise would expire automatically June 30.

That's enough to hold Congress on the job all summer. New NRA legislation faces a long fight in both houses, and it may be necessary to enact a single continuing resolution in order to keep the Recovery Administration alive after June 16, when the present law expires. Social security legislation is about to be taken up in the House, but there also are days of Senate talk ahead of it. Nail-studded paddles are waiting for the holding company bills. Carter Glass hasn't begun to work on the proposed banking act of 1935. And so on.

Last June, when Mr. Roosevelt was planning to go on his Hawaiian cruise, congressional leaders tried to talk him out of one point in a certain measure.

"If you insist on that provision," one leader told the President, "we'll be here for weeks talking about it."

"I need that provision," the President replied in effect, "and I don't have to go to Hawaii. I can call off the trip and go some other time."

The result was that Congress gave the President what he wanted and he still was able to leave for Hawaii. He has no plans for this summer which can not wait until Congress cleans up its work.

* * * *

One of the first things Mr. Roosevelt did on his return was to swing a sledge-hammer at the campaign to abolish the AAA processing taxes. He said work relief funds could not be used. Those who want the processing taxes abolished will have to propose some new and equally satisfactory tax before they will be listened to seriously at the White House.

In this Mr. Roosevelt vigorously backs up Secretary Wallace. But he further widens the breach with numerous Southern Democrats. The North Carolina Legislature had just adopted a joint resolution asking abolition of the cotton processing tax. Southern Senators and Representatives have been making daily attacks on it.

On top of this is the drive of cotton shippers, ginners and such handlers and processors against the Bankhead compulsory control act. Handlers of cotton are paid more on the basis of volume handled than on the basis of price. The grower has an interest in high prices. All other elements are interested in large volume or, as in the case of textile manufacturers, in low prices. This exposes the Bankhead act to attack from all groups except the growers. As long as the growers outnumber the others, the attacks will not get far.

However, it appears as if the cotton Senators will soon get one thing they badly want, a promise that the 12-cent loan on cotton will be continued for the coming crop. They think such a promise would hold up the market, which has been shaky for weeks, because of the heavy surplus in storage. Much of the current shooting at Wallace is suspected of being a smoke screen for the pressure to force announcement of a loan policy.

In deciding to bring up the social security bill without a gag rule, House leaders are ready to let the Townsendites and advocates of all sorts of fantastic proposals do their worst. They are, of course, taking the chance of having the Administration bill turned into a Townsend measure. But they figure the chance is not great, and if they can let the House stand up and be counted and win, it will put a deadly crimp not only in the Townsend agitation, but in the boasts of the Huey Long, the Coughlins and all others who count every fan letter as a vote in the bag.

Likewise, Mr. Roosevelt apparently is preparing to bring the bonus issue to a showdown in the Senate. A pair of good, smashing victories in these two instances would go far toward reviving confidence in the Administration's grip and steadying influence.

At this point Former Representative John Q. Tilson, Republican leader of the House under Coolidge and Hoover, called at the White House and presented Mr. Roosevelt with a copy of his new book on parliamentary law, a handy manual of the rules of Congress and how to get results under them. Mr. Roosevelt has done very well in getting action out of Congress without using a rule book. But there always is room for improvement.

Posse Seizes 4 as They Attempt $5,800 Holdup

By the Associated Press.

Albia, Iowa, April 10.—Four robbers who attempted to hold up operators of the Smoky Hollow Coal Co. and steal a $5,800 payroll walked into a trap set by a posse and were captured today.

The posse, armed with three machine guns and eight rifles, opened fire, wounding the driver of the bandit car. The automobile careened into a ditch and the four surrendered without attempting to use their pistols, rifles and sawed-off shotguns.

Plane Given Final Test For Trans-Pacific Hop

Alameda, Calif., April 10 (AP).—On its final test flight before blazing a transpacific air trail to China, the Pan American Airways' seaplane Pioneer Clipper was aimed by radio at navigation targets off the California coast today.

Under blind-flying conditions, caused by dense clouds and fog, the big four-motored craft reached one target, the steamship Maloio, 350 miles out at sea, exactly three minutes behind the schedule set by the Pan American radio station here.

Senate Contest Voiding Urged

Cutting's Counsel Assails Chavez Claim.

By the Associated Press.

Dismissal of the contest of the election of Senator Cutting (Democrat), New Mexico, brought by former Representative Dennis Chavez, of New Mexico, was urged yesterday before the Senate Elections Committee by Huston Thompson, conzel for Cutting.

With both Cutting and Chavez as spectators, Thompson declared the Chavez petition was "absurd on its face" and showed no basis for a contest.

Thompson told the committee the Chavez petition was misleading in that it contended there was no forum in New Mexico in which the contest might be brought. He explained the New Mexico laws permit filing of a contest in the home county of either the contestor or the contestee and charged Chavez "did not dare" submit the case to a court of law.

Mellon Denies Definite Pledge To Endow National Art Gallery

Reappears Dramatically as Witness in Income Tax Hearing.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburg, April 10.—Andrew W. Mellon personally completed the direct testimony in his income tax protest hearing today with the assertion he has not committed himself specifically to build or to endow a national art gallery in Washington or any other city.

The white-haired financier made that statement in a dramatic reappearance on the witness stand for further cross-examination, after letters by him and minutes of the A. W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust had been introduced showing a general plan for a national art gallery is under consideration.

Mellon's counsel claims he already has set aside 70 pictures for the trust. The financier is claiming a deduction on his 1931 income for gifts of five of these which cost him more than $3,000,000.

Robert H. Jackson, Government counsel, asked Mellon about a dispatch in a Washington newspaper on November 24, 1934, in which he was quoted as denying as "entirely unfounded" reports that he had arranged to build the art gallery.

Article Put in Evidence.

He was quoted then as saying, "I have engaged no architects, have caused no plans to be drawn, and have made no commitments to build or to endow a gallery at Washington, Pittsburgh, or elsewhere."

Mellon said his impression is that in the "sense of the word commitment" he had not made any then, nor has he done so as yet.

The newspaper article, introduced in evidence, had added that the question of an art gallery was one under consideration by the trustees of the trust which Mellon had established and that when they reached a final decision, it would be announced. Mellon, his son Paul, his son-in-law, David K. E. Bruce ,and attorney, D. D. Shepard, are the trustees.

One of the trustees said recently that the establishment of the proposed $50,000,000 gallery would be in "serious jeopardy" if the Government's ruling that it is not a tax-exempt organization is upheld.

Agreement With Gallery Revealed.

Jackson tried during his questioning to find the present location of the 73 paintings valued at more than $19,000,000 which the trust already has.

Mellon said that under an agreement with the board of directors of the Corcoran Gallery in Washington he was given a room with a double lock and that 15 or more of the art works were there.

He explained that he was given one key and "Mr. Minnegerode," the curator, was given the other, both of which are needed to open the door.

Some ten of the trust's pictures are still hanging in Mellon's Washington apartment, he said—all of them now insured for their full value, with the trust named as beneficiary.

Mellon's Secretary Questioned.

Jackson brought out, however, in cross-questioning Mellon's secretary, Howard M. Johnson, that until 1934, none of the trust's pictures had been insured and that it was not until November, 1934, several months after Mellon had insured 81 of his paintings, that a rider was attached to the insurance policy, naming the trust as beneficiary of the 25 which it owned.

Referring to 15 pictures purchased for Mellon from the Soviet government by M. Knoedler & Co., New York art dealers, Johnson said $6,654,000 had been paid to the dealers' credit in London and Paris between April 28, 1930, and April 6, 1931.

Included in this group of pictures were the five upon which Mellon claims a tax deduction of $139,000. The appeals board is hearing his protest against an extra assessment of $3,089,000.

Technically, no deduction would be allowable unless the Government establishes Mellon's income for that year was greater than he reported.

Mother Wins Freedom For Son Who Beat Her

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., April 10.—A mother stood tearfully before Judge Albert S. J. Owens today and pleaded that the law forgive her son, even as she had forgiven him—for beating her. Her plea was granted.

She told the judge how, on Sunday, she had walked all the way between the end of the Halethorpe, Md., car line and the House of Correction, Jessups, Md., and back—a distance of 30 miles—in order to visit her imprisoned son, serving a 1-year sentence.

He said he was sorry he had beaten her, the mother told Judge Owens, and had promised never to do it again.

The mother is Mrs. Sarah Finnegan, and her son is John C. Clauss.

Filene Warns Business Men To Accept NRA

Abundance Must Be Passed Around, He Tells Senate Finance Group.

By the Associated Press.

American business men were told yesterday by one of their most successful associates, Edward A. Filene, of Boston, that they must accept NRA because America has "come upon an utterly new time" in which the "abundance must be passed around."

Testifying in the Senate Finance Committee's NRA investigation, Filene also warned:

"If recovery does not come soon, we may as well get ready for whatever Dr. Townsend, Father Coughlin and Huey Long propose."

Filene, a gray-haired Boston merchant, said NRA had made mistakes over which he had "groaned" and lashed out at business for missing its opportunity to make the most of the law, but he added:

"Nevertheless, the issue now is clear. It is: Shall we keep on with this effort to organize our American life in accordance with the new economic facts, or shall we go back to the practices which landed us in this depression?"

Old Theories Persist.

"There was a time," he told the closely listening Senators, "when business could get more if the masses got less. There was a time when the employers could make more profits if their employes got less wages; and it was during that time that most of us business men developed our theories of business.

"But that time has passed. The trouble is that the theories are still sticking around."

Half a dozen Senators, who had listened only casually to other witnesses both for and against the NRA, deluged Filene with questions. He said he was opposed to price fixing. He favored a 30-hour week, though not necessarily immediately. He denied increased wages must raise prices.

Filene found he agreed thoroughly with the liberal economic views of Senator Black (Democrat), Alabama. And when he termed curtailment of production as "most stupid," conservative Senator Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma, exclaimed:

"Your are not so stupid as I thought you were."

Apparently enjoying the opportunity to expound his economic views, Filene testified that the "age of scarcity" when business with limited output could find customers even if the masses could not buy, had passed.

America today, he said, is facing "new economic facts." He added that "if business won't see this, then the business system is over."

"Because business," he said, "has not already seen it, conditions in this country have already become extremely threatening. I am not thinking merely of the poverty and unemployment. I am thinking of the millions whose spirits are breaking under the superstrain of this long-drawn-out poverty and unemployment."

Grocers Urge Extension.

Retail grocers, 40,000 strong, added their voices yesterday to the chorus rising from some quarters of industry on behalf of the extension of NRA.

H. C. Peterson, of Chicago, speaking for the National Association of Retail Grocers, urged the Senate Finance Committee to continue the recovery law for two more years.

A similar plea was received by the committee from S. L. Hoffman, New York cotton garment manufacturer, who testified to widespread benefits to workers and business under the code.

Peterson said his industry's code had been a code of ethics, and that its abandonment would bring "an era of price cutting so vicious that many grocers would be forced out of business."

Hoffman said that 13,000 child laborers in the cotton garment industry had been replaced by adult workers under NRA, and that wages as a whole were only 3 per cent below 1929 levels.

S. D. Nichols, St. Louis shoe manufacturer, protested that the shoe code was "absolutely in the hands of the large manufacturers." He asked that the "ball and chain of NRA" be dropped entirely.

Charges Intimidation.

Nichols charged that Capt. Joseph F. Battley, when sent by NRA to investigate an exemption given him, threatened to put him in jail when he refused to supply data which Battley said he wanted because he might purchase the company.

When he started to call the deputy administrator in Washington to protest, Nichols said the investigator withdrew his threat and warned him not to tell any one about it because he was "powerful in Washington."

Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, expressed the view yesterday that to correct faults in the operation of the national recovery act, two policies are fundamental:

1. That the Government take a larger part in drafting codes to lessen the influence of big business.

2. That the Government, rather than business, enforce the codes.

Unlike another Republican who has been independent of party leadership in the past, Senator Borah, Norris has doubts about the effectiveness of a return to the anti-trust laws.

State Enters Inquiry Into Student's Morals

Iowa City, Iowa, April 10 (AP).—The State, on personal order of Gov. Clyde L. Herring, today entered the investigation of University of Iowa student morals.

Asserting he had received "so many reports of various kinds, some of them conflicting," the chief executive ordered two State agents, Al Haight and Frank Moorhead, here to learn the truth. The investigation was precipitated by a charge involving women at fraternity houses.

Head of Prison, Four Aids Held In Torture Quiz

North Carolina Accuses 5 of Mutilation; $1,000 Bond Set for Each.

By the Associated Press.

Charlotte, N. C., April 10.—Four former prison camp officials and a physician were held on the felony charge of mutilation at the conclusion today of a judicial inquiry into the circumstances of two Negro convicts losing their feet.

Superior Court Judge Donald Phillips held there was probable cause for action against Henry Little, prison camp superintendent; J. W. Eudy, R. C. Rape and T. M. Gordon, guards, and Dr. C. S. McLaughlin, county physician.

He ordered them held under $1,000 bonds for the Superior Court term beginning May 11. Little and the three guards were also held for county court on charges of assault upon Ed Biggers and Oscar Cunningham, Negro convicts, who testified they were beaten at Little's camp in the dead of night.

Regulations of the State highway department, which has control of all convicts, require authorization from prison division headquarters for the whipping of convicts and the presence of a physician during the flogging.

T. S. Brown, another prison camp superintendent who was named in the warrants for the hearing, was discharged. Solicitor John G. Carpenter said there was no evidence to connect him with any criminal offense.

The inquiry was ordered by Gov. Ehringhaus upon the disclosure last month that Robert Barnes, 19, and Woodrow Shropshire, 19, both short-term prisoners, had developed gangrenous feet at Little's camp. They were taken to a hospital at Raleigh and their feet amputated.

Shropshire was brought here as the first witness for the inquiry, which began Monday morning.

Rolling himself back and forth in a wheel chair for 8 inches or so as he testified, he told a story of being chained with Barnes in unheated "dark cells" at Little's camp during bitter January weather. For 12 days, he said, they were chained in a standing position during the day and at night were given only a thin mattress, thrown on a concrete floor, and a few strips of blankets. Their diet, he said, was a piece of biscuit and a little water each day.

Beating Charged.

The Negro charged their feet froze and said his became so swollen he could not wear his shoes and was forced to stand barefooted on the cold concrete.

The dark cells, small units in a brick building about 9 feet square, are the prescribed punishment cells.

Shropshire said he told Little of his feet and asked for medical aid, but that it was three days before Dr. McLaughlin saw him and that then the camp physician told Little there was nothing wrong.

Shropshire also testified that Barnes, who was too ill to come here for the hearing, was beaten by Rape while chained to the bars of the cell.

The defense brought evidence by records and witnesses that the Negroes were chaind in a standing position only five days and that after the fifth day they received regular prison camp fare.

Dr. McLaughlin testified he visited them every other day and said his diagnosis of the cause of their gangrenous feet, which he said developed after their removal from the punishment cells, was erysipelas. He added he was still of the opinion this was the cause.

A number of physicians were called by the defense to testify that gangrene could follow erysipelas.

Pope Plans Letter On Peace April 26

To Be Read at Lourdes by Papal Legate.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Vatican City, April 10.—Pope Pius XI now plans to issue another peace message to the world in a letter to be read at Lourdes, France, on April 26, instead of in an encyclical April 28, it was learned tonight.

The pontifical letter will emphasize again the necessity of maintaining peace above everything and at any cost.

The Pope will reiterate that another conflict likely to involve a large part of the world would mean immense suffering for a majority of mankind and make thousands of innocent victims.

War would disrupt the entire mechanism of civilization, the Holy Father will warn.

His letter will be read by Cardinal Pacelli, the papal legate to Lourdes, at the opening of a three-day celebration, April 26-28, concluding the Holy Year.

It thus will acquire the solemnity of an encyclical. Church leaders say, because of the significance of the occasion and the prominence of the reader.

The Pope recently denounced war and called down the wrath of God on all peoples who would destroy peace.

Rubber Chiefs Asked to Meet Here on Strike

Secretary Acts to Avert Walk-Out at Request of Roosevelt.

Secretary Perkins yesterday invited representatives of three large Akron rubber companies—Goodrich, Goodyear and Firestone—to meet with her tomorrow in an effort to avoid a threatened strike.

Miss Perkins said she had been asked by President Roosevelt to endeavor to prevent the threatened walkout and to bring about settlement of difficulties. A request for intervention by the President was made by Representative Dow Harter, Democrat, of Akron.

The invitation was issued after the Secretary had returned from New York, where she conferred with representatives of the Rubber Manufacturers Association.

Later Miss Perkins is expected to confer with representatives of the American Federation of Labor, who are demanding recognition in the rubber plants.

The strike threat follows action of the National Labor Relations Board in ordering employe elections in the rubber plants. The elections were prevented by court action, brought by the manufacturers.

From Akron the Associated Press reported that union leaders refused to disclose whether they believe the peace effort would meet with success.

More than 35,000 workers at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., the B. F. Goodrich Co. and the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., would be affected if the strike is called, although many of them have indicated they would not join the walkout. Approximately 12,000 of the workers, the union says, are members.

Union employes of the Goodyear company voted in favor of a strike a week ago. Strike votes at the other two factories were completed by the union last night, but the count of the ballots will not be disclosed until today or later.

Coleman Claherty, president of the Rubber Workers' Union, said he would come to Washington tomorrow, and that although he had not received an invitation from Miss Perkins, "if she or President Roosevelt wants to talk to me, I'm willing."

Asked if he would delay the strike if requested by President Roosevelt or Miss Perkins, Claherty said his reply to such a request would be the question: "Why haven't you done something in the last year?"

The rubber workers' president said he also would ask: "Why haven't they gone to the employers and asked them to bargain?"

All three of the companies have refused to bargain collectively with the American Federation of Labor Union, and refused to hold a collective bargaining election.

Such an election under Government supervision has been the principal demand by the rubber workers' union. In addition it wants a 30-hour week, abolishment of company support for its rival so-called "company unions," and an agreement as a basis for settling any future disputes.

"The problem is one of human relationships and entirely capable of being solved," Miss Perkins said. The issue of whether the federation or company unions represented the workers, she explained, is not in the same class as a wage dispute where employes ask "unreasonable wages."

Washington Hebrew Services.

Continuing his lectures on "Some Eternal Questions," Dr. Abram Simon will speak at 8 p. m. tomorrow in Washington Hebrew Congregation, 816 Eighth street northwest, on "What Doth the Lord Require of Me?". Dr. Simon will speak at 10:30 a. m. Saturday on "The Clean and the Unclean."

2 Huey Long 'Tutors' Are Unpaid Admirers

Harvard Graduates in D.C. to Bring Larger Life With Machine.

It isn't for Huey Long that those two young Harvard graduates, generally suspected of being cultural tutors to the Kingfish, have been lingering in Washington these many weeks.

Their purpose is for greater, broader education of the masses through the dancing medium of a visomatic machine.

They are Huey Long men, to be sure, and perhaps the visomatic machine, now used mostly by various companies in instructing their salesmen how to turn the trick, may help their idol.

"We simply are admirers of Huey," the youths, Alan Blackburn and Philip Johnsen, said yesterday.

"The newspapers and the press associations have called us artists, and we aren't," smiled Blackburn, former director of the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

"We'd like to straighten this out once and for all. We quit our jobs because we were interested in politics, and who isn't? We were dissatisfied with things, and it seemed to us Huey had the right idea, so we went all the way to Louisiana and saw him.

"We were impressed by the work he'd done down there. Bridges, schools, better farms and things. We told him we wanted to work for him without pay. So far we've helped him dig up some material and quotations he used on radio addresses. We've never been paid by Huey or anyone else. We're paying our own expenses and financing this project you see here."

The visomatic machine, little known publicly, is like a talking picture projector. The pictures are stationary, and the sound comes from a phonograph record. It's value is its power to impress people.

"Suppose Einstein, or Huey Long, or some other great man is speaking from the picture," said Johnson, who wore a tweed suit and grinned. "Once he's seen on the visomatic machine and heard there, too, people will understand him more. The appeal is tremendous.

"Now let us give a demonstration on the machine."

The device was set up and Blackburn and Johnson produced a roll of films.

"These are from a firm making peanut butter," they explained

Blinds were drawn. Across the screen was projected an enormous jar of peanut butter.

"Velvety peanut butter," said the voice on the projector. "Calories, muscle builders for babies——

"What are peanuts? We will show you——"

And all the while Johnson and Blackburn talked on about an empire in which every man is king.

Subpenas Out For D. C. Probe Of Realty Deals

Lawyers and Bankers on List to Testify Before Congress Tomorrow.

Federal subpenas were being served late yesterday on 19 Washington lawyers, real estate operators and bankers preparatory to opening an investigation of local realty reorganizations by the House committee investigating real estate bondholders' reorganizations.

United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett was one of the witnesses to be summoned for public hearings which open at 10 a. m. tomorrow in the caucus room of the old House Office Building. Several justices of the District Supreme Court are to be invited to attend.

The five principal properties to be investigated are the Wardman properties, the Mayflower Hotel, the Shoreham Hotel, the La Salle Apartment, north side, and the Press Building Corporation.

Representative Adolph J. Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, chairman of the special House committee, said that the inquiry is but part of the nation-wide investigation in which hearings were held in New York, Chicago and other cities.

Listed for Summonses.

Witnesses who had been served by aids to the sergeant at arms early last night are:

Ord Preston, president of the Union Trust Co.; Lawrence B. Campbell, manager of National Press Building; Joseph Low and Paul E. Lesh, attorneys for the minority and majority Mayflower bondholders, respectively; Edward F. Colladay, former National Republican Committee chairman; H. L. Rust, jr., realty operator; George E. Sullivan, lawyer and prominent member of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Harry Bralove, owner of the Shoreham Hotel; Spencer Gordon, attorney; Rush L. Holland, former Mayflower trustee; William L. Beale, vice president and real estate officer of the American Security & Trust Co.; Julius I. Peyser, attorney and former receiver for the Wardman properties; Donald H. McKnew, broker, and Arthur Hellen, attorney.

Among other witnesses who were to be served are Harold Shaller, William B. O'Connell and Walter B. Guy, attorneys, and Garnett.

Four subpenas may be served on out-of-town men associated with the local realty organizations if the committee decides their testimony is necessary.

Investigators under the direction of E. Jay Comer, technical adviser of the committee, have been at work several weeks gathering evidence. Some of it is reported to be sensational despite the fact that much testimony has been given on all the five properties in court proceedings.

A special Senate sub-committee, in addition, conducted an exhaustive inquiry into the reorganization of the Mayflower Hotel ownership, although its precent recommendations were ignored by the District Supreme Court.

Investigators indicated, however, that the Washington inquiry has not uncovered as much fraud as have investigations by the committee in other cities.

Asked what might come of the local inquiry, Sabath said that the committee is interested chiefly in uncovering the methods by which thousands of bondholders over the country have been defrauded in both promotion and reorganization financing of realty properties.

Some of the evidence uncovered in others cities, he said, has resulted in the imprisonment of several persons. He intimated that the local disclosures may have the effect of bringing down rents in Washington by indirect means.

Rents Here Denounced.

"The rents here are outrageous," he said, "and it's too bad our committee hasn't the authority to do something about that directly."

Sabath said that he had conferred with several local attorneys in an effort to find one who could serve as counsel-prosecutor for the committee in the Washington hearings.

"Every one I considered, however, I found was either tied up with the real estate promotion or financing organizations," he said, "or else he was working on the other side as a chiseler."

As a consequence, the witnesses will be examined by Comer and A. G. Ingalls, chief analysist of the committee. W. T. Thomas, a local lawyer, has been aiding the committee, however, in gathering evidence.

The hearings probably will be held morning and afternoon, and perhaps one night, so that they may be concluded by the end of the week.

Other members of the special committee, besides Sabath, are Representatives Martin J. Kennedy (Democrat), of New York; Claude A. Fuller (Democrat), of Wisconsin; Thomas OMalley (Democrat), of Wisconsin; Francis D. Culkin (Republican), of New York, and Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois.

Sabath on Tuesday introduced a bill which provides for the appointment of a conservator by the President, either the Securities and Exchange Commission or the Comptroller of the Currency, to maintain jurisdiction over all bondholders' committees, receivers, trustees and the like. He said his legislation would aid some 4,000,000 bondholders, who have over $8,000,000,000 invested in bonds, mortgages and real estate securities.

The special Senate sub-committee headed by Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, recommended that the District Supreme Court appoint a special master to communicate with all bondholders, analyze all proposals, and then decide which is best for the bondholders.

Message Seen Roosevelt Hope To Block Bonus

bill which passed the House, or the Vinson-American Legion measure, which leaves bonus financing up to the Treasury.

Senator Harrison has agreed to hold brief hearings, and give the Senate a chance to vote, but to date has declined to interrupt the Finance Committee's NRA investigation for that purpose. He hopes to work out a bonus settlement satisfactory to the President.

A new compromise proposal yesterday was added to the imposing list. Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, agreed to write into his own bonus bill a preamble that might have the effect of staving off future payment of pensions to World War veterans who are not disabled.

One argument advanced against immediate cash payment is that veterans' organization would immediately drive for a pension plan. The Thomas plan contemplates maturing the bonus in 1937, paying it off in bonds, or paying needy veterans now, plus interest until 1937.

Word that the President may address a bonus message to the Senate brought with it intimation that Mr. Roosevelt, revived by his outing, is prepared to do battle with Congress on the bonus and other issues.

Returning from a similar vacation during the closing days of the last session of Congress, he informed members he was a "tough guy." Yesterday he told reporters he was feeling tougher.

Last session he contented himself with advising the Speaker he would veto a bonus bill. The House passed one anyway, but the Senate sidetracked it. He passed along the same word to Senate leaders a few weeks ago. Lest this might not be considered sufficiently emphatic, he apparently has decided on a message.

Speculation on Compromise.

There was some speculation last night on whether the President might suggest a basis for compromise in his direct appeal to the Senate. Senator Robinson made clear that if the message is sent, it will be before the Senate has a chance to vote on the issue. Nearly a dozen compromises already have been put forward, some of them by Senators close to the Administration.

The Senate majority leader was optimistic oven the legislative outlook following yesterday's chat with the President, but declined to discuss his program in detail. He indicated, however, that NRA extension will receive early attention. House leaders who conferred with the President Tuesday night hinted that NRA tops the list.

"All of the committees are hard at work and it is recognized as of first importance that the commitees charged with the consideration of measures of great consequence should do their work throughly and wisely," Senator Robinson told reporters.

"The Senate is well advanced. Its calendar, both with respect to executive nominations and legislative measures, is well up to date. Probably the Home Owners Loan Corporation bill will be reported today in the Senate. It probably will be taken up tomorrow.

8 Closed Banks Here May Pay Deposits 100%

Receivers Give Hope That D. C. Patrons Will Recover Fully.

ceiver Hardee, has so far paid off 60 per cent on all deposit claims and shows promise of paying the full 100 per cent with only a part of the possible stock assessment. Payments to depositors to date total $405,467, and cash on hand at the present time is $91,330. Estimates of the collectible assets that still remain were placed at $145,321, while total book assets were placed at $263,831.

Receiver Norman R. Hamilton, who is winding up the affairs of the Northeast Savings Bank, the Washington Savings Bank, the Potomac Savings Bank, the Seventh Street Savings Bank and the District National Bank, presented an equally hopeful report.

Depositors' Chances Good.

Three of his banks announced dividends several days ago, the Northeast Savings Bank bringing its total payments up to 85 per cent of the deposits with a 10 per cent payment. The Washington Savings Bank with its latest 10 per cent dividend was brought within 20 per cent of par, while the Potomac Savings Bank depositors will have received 62½ per cent of their money when they collect their alloted 12½ per cent.

The District National Bank has paid off 50 per cent on all deposits so far and holds promise of paying within a few per cent of par if the recapitulation of estimated book assets proves correct. Depositors have received $1,912,259 in settlement of 50 per cent of their claims. Cash in the hands of receiver Hamilton was set at $443,260 with a liquidating account of $87,779. Of the total remaining uncollected assets of $5,057,838, Hamilton estimated that only about $2,195,141 wil be turned into cash.

Should his estimate prove correct, depositors stand a good chance to receive all of their money, as an outstanding RFC Loan will leave sufficient residue to satisfy all deposit claims. An improtant factor in the liquidation of this bank is a pending suit contesting the right of the receiver to collect a 10 per cent stock dividend. Should Hamilton win the suit it would enable him to collect about $650,000 still outstanding out of the $1,000,000 stock assessment.

Washington's Cash Ample.

Depositors of the Washington Saving Bank will have received 80 per cent of their money when they receive dividend checks for 10 per cent that were mailed out yesterday. The latest installment will bring payments of this bank to $278,008. For further payments there will be available cash on hand of $20,959 while the estimated collectible assets will net $204,039 of the remaining book assets totaling $320,436. Even after deduction of an outstanding RFC loan of ambout $140,000 ample cash should be available to dispose of all claims in full.

The latest 10 per cent payment disbursals of the Northeast Savings Bank up to 85 per cent of $1,070,101 tied up when the bank closed. Further payments of this institution may be defrayed from $62,372 cash on hand and the estimated collectible assets of $395,896. Even after payment of an outstanding RFC loan in the neighborhood of $135,000 the expected collections will exceed the amount still due. No recourse has been taken in this bank to the possible 100 per cent stock assessment allowed by law.

Potomac Savings Bank depositors have been notified by Receiver Hamilton that a 12½ per cent dividend will be paid in the near future. The latest installment will bring total dividends paid by the bank to 62½ per cent. Payment of the initial 50 per cent returned $1,019,861 to depositors. Cash on hand at the present time is set at $20,669 by Hamilton, while $932,730 is estimated as the collectible portion of $1,627,453 in outstanding assets. A payable RFC loan will subtract approximately $250,000 from future collections, while determination of a $140,000 stock assessment may boost the pay-off figure close to 100 per cent.

The Seventh Street Savings Bank has paid out 80 per cent of its dividend claims for a total of $841,839, to date. A total of $56,846 in cash is in the hands of the receiver and the estimated value of collectible assets is placed by him at $490,933. Total assets of the bank receivable are set at $835,005, while an outstanding RFC loan will subtract about $300,000. It would necessitate only slightly more than $200,000 to pay depositors off in full.

Prediction of the estimated values of collectible assets in banks was stated in all reports as subject to unforeseen change ad not guaranteed as correct. Assets included in the figures are pledges for repayment of secured liabilities.

Miss Stein Missed Idea, Says Sinclair

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, April 10.—Upton Sinclair said today that "Gertrude Stein, whom nobody else can understand, apparently finds dimculty in understanding other people."

He was commenting on a San Francisco dispatch quoting her as as saying he told her in Los Angeles that "thank God" he did not win his Democratic race for Governor of California—that he did not know what he would have done it he had won.

"I said to her 'I did not want to be elected Governor of California—I wanted to end poverty in California,'" Sinclair asserted.

"Miss Stein quotes the first part of my sentence and leaves out the second part, apparently not realizing what a difference this makes. She furthermore makes me say I had no idea of what I would do. This must be a product of her creative imagination, as a consequence of her devotion to art for art's sake."

guaged by admissions to the Smithsonian Institution which totaled 84,699 last week, as compared with 28,352 during the previous week and 64,120 during the corresponding week last year.

"Wholesale conditions presented a slightly better outlook than for the previous week, although New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Memphis reported spotty activities," the report said. "Detroit and New Orleans are the only cities showing actual declines in the wholesale trade."

Industrial conditions were reported on an even level with slight declines in some sections balanced by increases in activities in others. In the automobile industry both production and sales were reported on the up-grade.

The real estate situation was reported to be somewhat better with reports of gains in current or prospective construction. The lumber industry in the Northwest was reported considerably improved.

New York reported that seasonal influences were stimulating trade in the metropolitan area and that while movements were varied, the general trend was toward better business.

Dallas, Tex., came the report that installment buying was up 31 per cent during the first quarter of 1935 as compared with the first quarter of 1934. Denver reported that only 113 carloads of fruit and vegetables moved during the week, as compared with 3,224 in the same week last year. This was taken as an indication of the effect of dust storms.

Jacksonville, Fla., reported the best tourist season since 1925-26.

Charging 'Gag,' Professor Runs For D.A.R. Post

Dr. Flora Gillentine Seeks Presidency on Platform of 'Open Forums.'

An attempt to throw open the convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution to discussion of controversial issues, which hitherto have been acted upon without delegates getting much oportunity to voice their opinions, will be made when the forty-fourth annual convention opens at Continental Hall here next Monday.

Running on what she has termed an "open-forum" platform, Dr. Flora M. Gillentine, Nashville college professor, yesterday outlined her campaign which will be waged against Mrs. William A. Becker, of Summit, N. J. She has opened campaign headquarters at the Hotel Willard, and announced the names of her slate, including the only District candidate in the running, Mrs. Harry C. Grove, former State regent, who seeks the registrar generalship of the national body.

Dr. Gillentine's five-point platform follows:

"Dr. Gillentine and her associated candidates advocate close relationship between the membership and administration of the national society, advocating that the administration policies shall reflect the opinion of the membership as expressed in local chapters and State conferences.

Attacks Propaganda.

"Oppose injection of partisan or political issues into the society, and recognize the right of every citizen to hold any political belief not contrary to the established form of government in the United States.

"Hold that the society should not be used for dissemination of propaganda for any outside groups, but should confine the distribution of publications to such as have authorization of the society only.

"Promise in general a progressive, liberal and independent administration based upon principles of patriotism, popular education and self-government."

In elaborating upon the open forum phase of her campaign, Dr. Gillentine said:

"It seems to me that the Congress should be a meeting place for discussion and deliberation, consideration of opinions and evaluation of experiences, much more than it has been.

"Too rarely do we have any discussion on the floor, seldom do we hear from delegates, and in debates upon matters offered for consideration the delegates are hurried by knowledge that a guest speaker or artist is waiting to be heard.

Fight Predicted.

"We believe that hereafter the Continental Congress should be arranged so that at least half of the sessions should be given to open forum discussions, freely participated in by officers and delegates alike."

It was predicted that the effort to bring discussion out into the open will be opposed by those who believe that all legislative policies should be reserved for the Congress and passed without State delegates arguing their merits. Critics say this amounts to "gagging" of State regents, who represent the State chapters.

Another controversial phase of the election contest is that the present group of national officers, headed by Mrs. Russell W. Magna, president general, are divided in their allegiance to the two groups whose candidacy has been announced. Both Mrs. Becker and Dr. Gillentine are supported by members of the cabinet and present board of management.

Running with Mrs. Gillentine are the following: Mrs. John A. Hardy, Mississippi; Mrs. Fred Schilpin, Minnesota; Mrs. Harry C. Grove, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. E. B. Hall, Indiana; Mrs. Adam McMullen, Nebraska; Mrs. Clyde H. Porter, Missouri; Mrs. Herbert F. Gaffney, Georgia, and Mrs. Philip Caswell, Rhode Island.

Union Market Group Elects.

The Union Market Business Association yesterday re-elected Julius P. Gay president for one year. Other officers elected are M. J. Uline, vice president; A. S. Cudmore, secretary, and M. A. Keane, treasurer.

Navy Will Seek Medical Center In Washington

$3,500,000 PWA Funds to Be Asked for New Hospital Unit.

An allotment of $3,500,000 of Public Works Administration funds will be requested by the Navy Department to build a new Naval Hospital here, it was announced yesterday by Secretary Swanson.

The proposed medical center will follow plans drawn in 1931, when Congress authorized the development, but appropriated only enough money to complete the plans. Providing the allotment is made, the new hospital will be located on the site of the present Naval Medical Center at Twenty-third street and Constitution avenue.

The new facilities would include space for the Medical School and the Naval Dispensary, in addition to the regular hospital building. The dispensary now is located in the Navy Building. The design will be of Federal, Colonial type. This specifies that the buildings be constructed low enough to conform in architecture with the Lincoln Memorial and the other Government buildings in the area.

Officials of the Fine Arts Commission had originally suggested that the hospital be located at Walter Reed in conjunction with the Army Medical Center facilities. Navy officials objected strenuously to this idea, later convincing the Fine Arts authorities that it was imperative that their medical facilities remain separate.

Swanson also disclosed that he is considering plans for a new Navy Department building. As yet, however, no plans have been drawn and no estimates made. Among ideas being discussed is a plan to construct a joint department building for use of both the Army and Navy. Swanson may ask PWA officials for funds for this new building. He also hopes to get money for naval bases, dry docks and equipment.

Trap Perfected to Bag Spores Of Plant Disease in Upper Air

Army Prepares to Make Bacterial Exploration of Stratosphere.

The heretofore private lives of spores of plant disease, which may exist in the stratosphere, will be intruded upon next June by the National Geographic Society and the Army Air Corps.

A special device, designed to trap the spores, has just been tested successfully over the Capital from the blimp Enterprise.

Science is seeking knowledge as to the existence of these spores in the cold but sun-bathed reaches of the stratosphere.

The traveling companions of the spores are bacteria of the many diseases that damage crops and organisms harmful to men and animals.

The spore trap will hang from the gondola of the new balloon. When released, it will drop for a short period, thus getting away from the balloon. Then the outer parachute will open.

The resulting jerk will release a second parachute from the sterile bag. When the second parachute opens, it will remove plugs from a sterile tube. The stratosphere air will stream through the tube, and if the air contains any spores they will be caught like flies on fly paper.

While the apparatus is still more than 6 miles above sea level, another device will clamp sterile plugs into the ends of the collecting tube, so that spores near the earth's surface will not be gathered.

The successful tests of the trap were made by Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, director of the Bureau of Standards, and Drs. Lore A. Rogers and Fred C. Meier, of the Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Meier collaborated with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in the collection of spores from the air of the Far North during his crossing of Greenland in 1933 with Mrs. Lindbergh.

Pitched Battle Ends Jail Break; 3 Dead

Mother, 4 Children Die in Family Row

Slayings Laid to Jealousy Over Marriage.

By the Associated Press.

Philadlphia, April 10.—Victims of what investigators theorized was a family quarrel over a daughter's prospective wedding, a mother and her four children were found slashed to death in their home today.

They were slain, Police Inspector John H. Driscoll said he believed, by the husband and father, Tony de Marco, 35, who was found in the house, critically wounded with two pistol bullets in his head.

The dead were Mrs. Angelina de Marco, 48; her daughters, Olga, 14, and Jean, 20, and her sons, Eddie, 12, and Raymond, 22.

"Jealousy and despondency," were advanced by Driscoll as the motives for the tragedy, with De Marco apparently enraged over the wedding plans of dark-haired Jean, said by friends to be his favorite child.

He was charged with propagandizing in America against Czechoslovakia.

Dust Swirling Over 8 States; Hundreds Flee

Worst Storm of Series in West Wreaks Havoc With Crops.

ture of gloom. L. C. Aitcher, superintendent of the Fort Hays (Kans.) agricultural experiment station, said little wheat survives in the Northwest and even if rain should come it would be of doubtful value.

"Very poor" was the Federal official word on crop conditions in western Kansas, where a large part of the country's wheat is grown.

The trial of Miles (Steamboat) Ware at Tribune, Kans., on a charge of slaying a railroad conductor was ordered adjourned indefinitely until the dust storm has abated. Judge Fred J. Evans wore goggles at today's brief session.

Two Children Rescued.

Two small children of D. B. Weeden, tying themselves together with a rope to avoid becoming separated in the storm, were found today near Vanceville, Kans., after wandering all night in the blinding dust. The searching parties exceeded 100.

Storm reports ran like this:

Meade, Kans.—Schools closed. Little wheat left. Visibility, 50 feet.

Garden City, Kans.—Stores closed. Tourists compelled to stop. Trains behind time.

Wellington, Kans.—"It's the year's worst."

Emporia, Kans.—Storm wiped out all trace of an early morning rain.

Dighton, Kans.—Haven't seen the sun since dust storm set in Monday morning and the dust is growing worse.

Manhattan, Kans.—All Kansas State College athletic practice called off.

Rain Brings Mud.

Topeka, Kans.—Rain followed dust and covered all with mud. Frank Stone, of the highway patrol, checked to determine if any State roads should be closed in the interest of safety.

Scott City, Kans.—A man who promised his wife, visiting in eastern Nebraska, that he would come at once when their baby arrived, received the news this morning, but was unable to keep his promise because of the dust.

Eastern Colorado farmers near the stricken Oklahoma Panhandle were reported determined to "stick it out."

Fort Dodge, Iowa, reported dust so intense that motorists had to turn on headlights.

In Nebraska, Lincoln, Omaha and York were affected in varying degree.

In New Mexico the storm appeared to be subsiding. At Amarillo, Tex., Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., was compelled to abandon her motor car in favor of the train in order to meet her husband at Albuquerque, N. Mex. It was too dusty to drive.

In western Kansas, work in listing soil—to prevent dust storms—was halted because the atmosphere was too suffocating to permit outside activity.

By the Associated Press.

Calhoun, Ky., April 10.—Fearing an outbreak of typhoid in this flood-stricken area, the State board of health today sent Dr. V. A. Stilly, district supervisor, here to assist Dr. G. L. Thompson, county health officer, in providing medical care for the refugees, many weakened by cold and exposure.

While rampant Green River continued to rise slowly during the day, Miss Ruth Riley, American Red Cross worker from Washington, estimated that 375 families had abandoned their homes.

"Health conditions constitute our chief worry now," Miss Riley said. "Many of these people have been drinking flood water and we fear an outbreak of typhoid may result." She said there were now six cases of typhoid in the area and several cases of pneumonia.

Continuous rising of the river indicated that a total of 600 families would be evacuated from their homes before the river reaches its expected crest Saturday. Normally 450 feet wide, the river is now more than five miles across at Calhoun.

Tents, cots, bed clothing and kitchen equipment were brought from the Hopkinsville Armory today and were being distributed.

Asbury Cecil, another Red Cross representative from Washington, arrived this morning to assist Miss Riley.

Plans Abandoned For Social Bill Gag

few days to map strategy probably will be called. The first flare-up at the Rules Committee meeting on floor procedure came when Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, reported there was virtually no opposition to the bill by a long list of witnesses questioned.

"I've heard it said the witnesses were selected for their discretion," interposed Representative Mapes (Republican), Michigan.

"It was a wide open hearing," Doughton countered. "Nobody was refused the privilege of testifying."

Harlan Supported.

Representative Harlan (Democrat), Ohio, drew support from Republican committeemen when he said he thought minority members of the Ways and Means Committee should have been notified of the hearing. Chairman O'Connor insisted they would have known about it had they been interested enough to inquire.

Doughton explained his committee would not make any recommendation concerning the rule other than the time for debate.

"We will be guided by whatever you determine is wise and practical," he said.

Representative Lehlbach (Republican), New Jersey, sought to pin Doughton down.

"Do you want a rule permitting or precluding amendments?" he asked.

"That is a matter for the Rules Committee to determine," Doughton answered.

The name of President Roosevelt, with whom Doughton and Speaker Byrns conferred on the bill Tuesday night, was not injected into the discussion.

Dust Victims Pray Thrice Daily for Rain

Guymon, Okla., April 10.—Dust-choked Guymon Methodists lifted their voices in prayer today, asking for rain and the end of the silt-storms which have swept the area for weeks without abating.

Corn, Sorghums Held Only Hope in Kansas

Manhattan, Kans., April 10 (AP).—The big wheat belt of western Kansas, struck by drought and dust, was pictured as a devastated area today by R. I. Throckmorton, head of the Kansas State College agronomy department.

"The only hope now, if they can get rain instead of dust, is in sorghums and corn," he said.

Process Taxes On Cotton Stay; Protests Grow

Roosevelt Refuses to Pay Crop Benefits From Relief Funds.

ago the President has been urged to issue such a statement.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said later in the day that he and the President were in agreement on continuation of processing taxes. Authority for paying the benefits to producers from the work relief fund was contained in an amendment to the work relief bill sponsored by Senator George.

Curley to Lead Governors.

The New England governors are being headed, on their visit to Washington, by Gov. James Curley, of Massachusetts.

In the group which discussed cotton with the President were Senators George, Smith, Bankhead of Alabama, Byrnes of South Carolina, and Representative Marvin Jones of Texas. Senator George, who has been outspoken in his criticism of the processing tax, was reticent as he left the White House, but indicated that he may return for a further conference.

While processing taxes and loans were being discussed, the Senate Agriculture Committee approved the bill amending the agricultural adjustment act. The measure was amended by the committee to curtail some of Secretary Wallace's power in production control.

Among the principal amendments to the bill as introduced was a provision that would limit the Secretary, in examining the books of a processor or distributor to determine whether marketing and licensing agreements are being carried out, to obtaining only such specific information "as he may find necessary or pertinent."

Another amendment, which would constitute an important restriction, would require consent of two-thirds of the producers of a farm commodity before the Secretary could impose a license on its processors and distributors.

A third amendment, over which considerable controversy is expected, provides that a farmer who not only produces but also packs a commodity shall be subject to license without consent of two-thirds or any other proportion of other producers of the commodity.

Wheat Crop Below Normal.

While the bill as amended has been approved by the Senate committee, the measure still is in the House Committee, to which it was returned after it had once been reported out.

Following issuance of a crop report indicating that the wheat crop would be far below normal, Secretary Wallace predicted that production "would about equal the normal domestic consumption, without any carryover or any grain for export. The report indicated a winter wheat yield of 435,499,000 bushels. This compares with the 1928-32 average of 618,186,000 bushels and with production of 405,034,000 bushels last year.

Wallace said lifting of restrictions on the spring wheat crop would increase production by 10,000,000 bushels, bringing that crop up to 190,000,000 bushels. This, together with the estimated winter wheat crop, would about equal normal consumption, 625,000,000 bushels.

U. S. Is Assured British to Shun Commitment

Mission at Stresa Parley "Exploratory,' Simon Tells Bingham.

By the United Press.

London, April 10.—Great Britain assured the United States today that the three-power conference in Stresa among Britain, France and Italy on German re-armament tomorrow will be "purely exploratory."

Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon told United States Ambassador Robert W. Bingham that Britain intended to make no commitments.

The foreign secretary emphasized to Bingham that the British delegation was going to Italy "with an open mind, to make the best of a situation" the gravity of which he made no attempt to conceal. He assured the United States envoy also that the issues to be discussed at Stresa would be explained fully to him on their return.

American quarters said these issues would not directly affect American interests, although Washington naturally is concerned.

Before leaving, Prime Minister MacDonald and Simon met with the cabinet. Britain's efforts both at Stresa and during the extraordinary session of the league council in Geneva next week apparently will be directed to diluting the projected Franco-Russian alliance by merging this pact with a general security agreement or seeing it is left open to German adherence.

British Public In Dark on Details

By the Associated Press.

London, April 10.—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon were en route to Stresa tonight with proposals for an inclusive European security system, leaving the Parliament and the public largely in the dark as to the details.

While Stanley Baldwin, lord president of the council, in an address Monday plainly hinted that Britain may have to take an active part in efforts to stabilize the continent, there was no official statement of the cabinet's policy to Parliament.

The British public, moreover, was confused by various conflicting reports emanating from unofficial sources as to what the prime minister and the foreign secretary will place before the French and Italians.

Bingham Given Word.

A few persons, including United States Ambassador Robert W. Bingham and other diplomats, were privy to some secrets of the program which, it was learned reliably bears out Baldwin's hints.

It was known the cabinet feels that public opinion, far behind the actual situation, does not realize the part Britain must play at Stresa. The cabinet, however, is said to be without hope of clarifying the situation until after the tri-power conference.

In the opinion of the ministers, the British can not afford to show their hand until they see what the French and Italians have.

The Evening Standard, giving renewed expression to Lord Beaverbrooks catchword of "splendid isolation" from European affairs, today warned the government not to commit itself to any Italian moves against Germany, because the country would instantly and furiously repudiate the commitment."

Take Paris Plane.

MacDonald and Simon left by special airplane for Paris, intending to entrain there for Stresa, after the third cabinet session in three days. As he stepped into the plane, the prime minister said:

"We are starting on a mission of international good will and cooperation united with security and peace. I hope with all my heart we will be successful. We shall certainly try to be."

The two, authoritatively described as ready to pledge Britain's active participation in their proposed security system subject to parliamentary approval, were said to be hopeful of heading off any sharp action directed at Germany, believing they could convince France and Italy that the general system is best.

Before he left Simon received Ambassador Bingham to explain the British program and tell him Britain goes to Stresa without any definite commitments.

A large staff of British experts, including Geoffrey Thompson, expert on Ethiopian and Egyptian affairs, and Sir Robert Van Sittart, undersecretary of state for foreign affairs, left for Stresa by train. Van Sittart's inclusion broke precedent, since custom hitherto has dictated that the foreign secretary and the undersecretary shall not leave Britain at the same time.

Admirals Deny Collusive Bidding

U. S. Neutrality Studied by Hull And Roosevelt

Secretary's Report Almost Due; Filipino Trade Parley Outlined.

ing carefully watched by embassies abroad and immediately reported to the State Department.

Earlier in the day Secretary Hull revealed that the department's report on neutrality would be submitted to the President within a short time. The nature of this report has been kept a deep secret, but it is reliably reported that a majority of those in the State Department who have been engaged in the study favor going ahead with a neutrality program which would keep American citizens and their property out of war zones.

Plans Trade Parley.

The President, in an unrelated matter, took action which will hasten the elimination of one possible cause of war for this country when he revealed that he planned to call a joint trade conference with Philippine Island representatives as early as possible after the inauguration of the insular commonwealth government, November 15.

Determination of the future trade relations between the United States and the Filipinos is a step toward the independence of the islands, which has been one cause of American concern in Far Eastern affairs. The President revealed he had asked the interdepartmental committee on trade studies to prepare basic material by the time the conference convenes.

In a letter to Governor General Frank Murphy of the islands, who luncheoned yesterday with the President, Mr. Roosevelt requested that similar studies be inaugurated in the islands in order that "effective measures for promoting mutual trade advantages between the two countries may be given early consideration."

Meanwhile on Capitol Hill the Nye Munitions Committee prepared to substitute its much more sweeping plan for taking the profits out of war for the McSwain measure, overwhelmingly adopted Tuesday by the House. When the Senate meets today an effort will be made to have the McSwain bill referred to the Nye group instead of the Military Affairs Committee, to which it ordinarily would go.

Gets Navy Denial.

The committee continued its inquiry into activities of shipbuilders, receiving from the Navy Department a denial of earlier testimony that the department had urged collusive bidding by shipbuilders.

Rear Admiral Emory S. Land read a statement asserting that the testimony of Clinton L. Bardo, former president of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation that the Navy Department encouraged shipbuilders "to get together" was "incorrect in its entirety." Rear Admiral Samuel Robinson made a similar denial.

"No official in authority in the Navy Department would make such a statement and no such statement was made to Mr. Bardo by any official in authority in the department," asserted Admiral Land.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, however, observed that the Navy Department should have investigated more closely bids submitted for ships in the 1933 building program of $238,000,000, instead of being satisfied with "running down the source of a rumor of collusion."

President Roosevelt ever since entering the White House has been actively interested in taking steps to keep this country out of another war abroad. The present European situation has aroused him to renewed activity toward the formulation of a sound neutrality policy. Several weeks ago the President asked the Nye Munitions Committee to undertake the task of framing such a program, along with its take-the-profits-out-of-war plan.

The first fruits of the committee's study of the problem were evidenced Tuesday when Senators Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, and Bennett C. Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, introduced in the Senate resolutions authorizing the President to forbid the making of loans or extension of credit to any belligerent nation and to withhold from American citizens passports for travel in war zones or on ships of belligerents.

Swanson Sends Report.

The Nye committee also is at work drafting legislation which would embargo munitions shipments to belligerent nations and prohibit the use of American-flag ships as carriers of contraband to countries at war.

These four proposals form the basis of the neutrality program under discussion by the President and Mr. Hull. The entire question, however, is a declicately technical one and one question in controversy is whether the President should be given discretion to invoke such legislation or whether it should be mandatory on him to proclaim the proposed restrictions when war abroad breaks out.

Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson said yesterday he had sent a report on the neutrality problem to Secretary Hull sometime ago, as reported last week by The Post. In that report the Navy Department went on record as opposed to any changes in this country's policy which would have the effect of surrendering in advance of a war abroad any neutral rights which this country has previously claimed. The Navy, it was said, reported it was able to defend all rights which the country might claim as a neutral.

The War Department, it is understood, has taken a similar attitude against surrendering any neutral rights. Secretary Hull said he had received both reports, but that they constituted only a segment of the general problem under study by the department.

Foreign Policy Group Reports.

The Foreign Policy Association, in a report prepared by its president, Dr. Raymond L. Buell, and H. W. Briggs, associate professor of international law at Cornell, contended that so difficult is the neutrality problem that even the adoption of drastic restrictions on commerce, such as those proposed, would not automatically keep the United States out of another war.

The report went on to assert that "opinions may differ whether the United States went to war against Germany because of a desire to enforce neutral rights, to protect the national honor or to avenge the death of Americans on the high seas by German submarines."

But, the report held, "the fact remains that few of these controversies would have arisen had the United States imposed at the beginning of the World War an embargo on the export of munitions to all belligerents, prohibited private loans to belligerents and announced that it would not protect any American citizens attempting to carry on certain types of neutral trade in specified danger zones."

Views Divided As Powers Talk At Stresa Today

England, France and Italy Differ as to Method to Gain Security.

Germany may participate and enter a collective system. MacDonald, therefore, is coming to Stresa without a definite plan, but for a visit of exploration."

An equally authoritative source stated the Italian position thus:

"The bigger commitment Great Britain makes on the continent, the less commitment she actually makes. That is, the more she is willing to commit herself now to a three-power accord, the less dangerous it will be because it will call a halt on Germany. We believe Italy, France and England will accept Germany's rearmament up to this point. What we want now is an accord not as to these armaments, but as to their use.

"In other words, we want an accord whereby the three nations will act in case Germany takes some further step."

A British spokesman tonight indicated Britain's desire to remove one possible future peril for the continent's peace, saying the status of the Memel statute—lopped off from Germany after the World War and now held by Lithuania—would undoubtedly form one topic of conversation.

Aim to Bar Dispute.

The discussion, it was indicated, will concern what pressure the three powers can bring to bear on Lithuania to prevent conflict between the Reich and Baltic nation.

It will be "strictly business" at tomorrow's opening session of the conference. After the arrival of Macdonald and Simon at 8:30 a. m., the leading members of the three delegations will meet on Isola Bella at 10:30 a. m. and continue their conversations until 1 p. m.

A simple luncheon then will be served on the island and after luncheon the delegates, after a brief promenade, will resume their discussions, to continue them until late afternoon.

No social event has been scheduled for tomorrow evening, and it was expected the delegation would discuss among themselves points brought up during the day's meetings, in order to be prepared for a possibly conclusive conference Friday.

Three Nominated For City's Council

Salisbury Democrats Win 8-Sided Contest.

By the Associated Press.

Salisbury, Md., April 10.—Hilary M. Taylor, I. Virgil Hitchens and John E. Morris today were winners in the eight-sided race for Democratic nomination as members of the Salisbury Council.

The general election will be held next month, but Democratic nomination is tantamount to election, as no other party ticket has been put into the field.

Less than 42 per cent of the registered voters went to the polls. Taylor, now completing his second one-year term, led the ticket for the third time and Councilman W. Groscup Jones, candidate for reelection, was fifth in the field of eight. The recent General Assembly passed a bill fixing the term of councilman at two years.

Stresa Effect On Versailles Pact Pondered

France Fears Remodeling May Be Result, Favors War Sanction.

By the United Press.

Paris, April 10.—France fears that remodeling of the Versailles Treaty is certain to be a major result of the Stresa conference tomorrow and the extraordinary session of the League of Nations council in Geneva next week.

Authorities feel that since Germany already has wrecked the military restriction clauses, they must rebuild the treaty to offset Germany's new military power.

One way will be to strengthen the league covenant, particularly articles 10, 16 and 17, to provide automatic sanctions against an aggressor.

Will Meet League Stand.

The French realize the proposed eastern European security pact of mutual armed assistance risked complications with the principles of the league covenant. However, in the revised form to be presented at Stresa to Italy and Britain this week-end, the pact will conform with the covenant, France and Russia engaging to execute the recommendations of the league.

Under article 16, automatic and financial sanctions (penalties) are automatic against any aggressor, but the application of automatic military aid never has been agreed definitely among members of the league. The effect of an astern Locarno in new form will give this interpretation of articles 10, 16 and 17.

Follows Article 16.

This, of course, means the projected French-Russian pact will be a military alliance, but the contention here is that it will be no more military than article 16 of the covenant, which never has been fully applied.

The French also argue against accusations that it is an outright military alliance with Moscow by emphasizing that the pact will be open to any powers desiring to enter it, including Germany and Poland.

Cows Have A Past

COWS are established institutions.
They have lineage, family crests, their ancestral trails are longer than history.
Archaeologists found a picture of a cow on the side of a cave in the Pyrenees.
They figured the drawing was 20,000 years old.
Citizens of Babylon looked up to the cow. Five thousand years ago they adorned a frieze with her image.
Hindu folklore is rich in praise of the cow. The "sacred cow" has come down to our times as a symbol of veneration. Every newspaper man who values his head must know the citizens in that category.
The cow exemplifies the broadening effect of travel.
Five hundred years ago there were none on this continent.
They were an old Spanish custom. DeSoto and Coronado sponsored their introduction to the first families of the Mississippi valley and the Rio Grande country.
The cow was news at Jamestown in 1611, at Plymouth Rock in 1624. By 1650 the cow had caught on. New England was exporting butter and cheese.
It used to be said that every cow had her fling, as every dog had his day. There was the cow that jumped over the moon, and there was Mrs. O'Leary's cow that got blamed for setting fire to Chicago—reason enough for the proverb that all's not milk that comes from a cow.
The modern cow—25,000,000 of her in the United States—has settled down to business—and a big and vital business it is, providing milk every day for 126,000,000 people.

Private Refuges Of Game Proposed

Maryland Warden Hopes to Popularize Plan.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 10.—E. Lee Lecompte, State game warden, is beginning an effort to induce Marylanders to establish small, private game refuges throughout the State.

The move would help silence the demand for a closed season on migratory waterfowl being presented insistently by the West, he said. The present dust storms, following the drought of last year, has placed added emphasis on the demand.

"There is much meadowland in Maryland," Lecompte said, "which would be ideally suited to the raising of a few wild ducks each year. Owners of the property could contributed materially to game conservation by buying a few eggs and raising game."

The Immigration Racket.

Frequent and persistent rumors of corruption in some branches of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization have been heard for a number of years. Investigations in 1931 and 1932 were of little value in bringing about reforms. The Department of Labor is to be congratulated upon the apparently thorough inquiry which it is now conducting and its vigorous action against crooked officials and employes as well as undesirable aliens.

"Thousands of instances of perjured declarations, false use of records, forgeries, impersonations and spurious citizenships," it is charged, "have occurred during the ten-year period." Even though only minor employes may be involved, this situation is a serious reflection upon officials of the Department of Labor during that period. The immigration service lends itself easily to corruption and blackmail. But that is certainly no excuse for the persistence of fraudulent practices and bribery over an entire decade.

Apparently the full extent of this racketeering practice has not yet been revealed. Presumably the inquiry is still going on, and new indictments may be expected, along with an extensive program of deporting aliens smuggled into the United States and canceling fraudulent citizenship papers.

When the whole situation has been exposed it is to be hoped that the Department of Labor will come forward with a practical plan to plug up the loopholes in the immigration law. The ease with which aliens can be smuggled into the country is a constant temptation to blackmailers, racketeers and even employes in the immigration service to conspire for regularization of their status. Correction of these legal defects will be as conducive to improvement of the immigration service as prosecution of unfaithful employes.

Bow Bells Won't Toll.

Sad news from London. Its schools "are extinguishing the Cockney accent!" They are using phonographic records of the king's pure English to terminate the lilt of the Bow Bells' lingo, which, the naive dispatches add, "corresponds to New York Bowery speech."

Bad news from London. England will resent the mechanical method of instruction as an official sanction to old insinuations against the accent of London's human pedagogues. Over here, too, the announcement will rouse bad blood on the Bowery—first, because the young of that district say they have no peculiarity of accent; second, because their elders insist that the true Bowery accent, far from corresponding to Cockney, was sui generis and corresponds to nothing at all. Finally, the whole non-British world will regard the obliteration as filching from modern life one more of its few remaining colors.

Sad news and bad news. But will it prove true news? For many a year Brooklyn schools have been trying to wean their charges from Brooklynese—and how far have they succeeded? Let the London and County Council pound its pupils as much as it pleases; they are not such beasts as those which one of them (according to Kipling) celebrated:

> It ain't the 'eavy 'aulin' as 'urts the 'osses 'oofs—
> It's the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard 'ighway.

Cockney is more than a dialect; it is a language—and, in language, heredity is mightier than instruction.

Gay And Gloomy Guide.

John Erskine, professor of English at Columbia University is, in the broadest sense of the word, an "educator." Not only has he an amusing ability for making fact sound like fiction, but he possesses the equally unusual capacity of making fiction sound like fact. He launched a thousand controversies with his restoration of the ruins of Helen of Troy. And Galahad, to Erskine, was simply a likable chap with inhibitions.

Generalizations of the sort that it pleases Erskine to make are usually more to cause an effect than to effect a cause. There is a doubt whether even the professor himself expects anyone to take them seriously. Of such debatable caliber was the interview granted by him recently, in which he said that the nation's colleges are "prolonging infancy" and pampering their students to a deplorable degree.

This is one of those tongue-in-the-cheek remarks carefully calculated by Mr. Erskine to start an argument at anyone's dinner party. But this time it appears that his tongue was also grounded in fact. For simultaneously appeared a news story announcing that Bucknell University is revising its library classification to fit the students' moods. Subjects will be grouped to offset boredom, dejection, and those two kindred subjects, love and "the blues."

It is too early to predict how popular this new form of "required reading" will become. But since Bucknell is already in the throes of inaugurating this unique manner of "pampering," to which Prof. Erskine is so averse, it is not out of place at this time to ask a question. And that is—under just what collegiate "mood" would the librarian of that institution classify Mr. Erskine's book on: "The Moral Obligation to Be Intelligent?"

The Sessions At Stresa.

The course of history is much more a running stream than a chain of events. So it would be exaggerated to single out the conversations which open at Stresa today as being of paramount importance in the effort to liquidate Europe's crisis successfully.

To some extent the attitude of the participants—Great Britain, France and Italy—is already determined. To some extent this conference will only be a preparation for next week's meeting of the Council of the League of Nations. But none the less Stresa must be regarded as a landmark. For it will be a step in deciding whether or not Europe can find a peaceful exit from the diplomatic chaos created by Hitler's denunciation of Part V of the Treaty of Versailles.

None of the participants are taking an absolutely defined policy to the meeting, which alike discounts the probability of any irrevocable decisions, and encourages hope that a basis for agreement on a common orientation may be laid.

The British will urge a conciliatory policy toward Germany, so far as that can be made consistent with a refusal to sanction unilateral German action in defiance of treaty obligations. The Italians will be inclined to support the British attitude, if adequate guarantees for Austrian independence are included, and a free hand for Mussolini's Abyssinian ambitions is clearly understood. The French will not necessarily oppose the relatively pro-German attitude of Great Britain, but will make it plain that in one way or another they intend to have their security confirmed. The announcement in Paris of a definite Franco-Russian defensive alliance, coming on the eve of the Stresa gathering, is ample evidence that France will not subordinate her own conception of national defense to any hope of a collective accord.

It is not merely the differences among the participants, but also the impossibility of predicting the future German attitude, which makes any definitive agreement at Stresa highly improbable. But what can, and probably will, be done is to create a common front to bring pressure upon Hitler to cancel Germany's as yet unexpired notice of withdrawal from membership in the League of Nations. At Geneva there are two types of machinery—that which can be invoked for a constructive solution of a nation's legitimate grievances, and that which can be invoked to further joint action against an aggressor state. With Germany again a League member the problems at issue would be much more susceptible of solution. It is clearly in the general interest that effort be made to achieve that end.

If Germany refuses to return to the League, or asks too high a price for a renewal of her membership, the alliance method favored by France and Russia will receive a decided impetus. It can be, as these two nations desire, disguised as a strengthening of league procedure. But in reality such a development would turn the League into a protective combination against Germany and virtually end its claim to be an impartial international organization.

The maneuvers at Stresa, therefore, will set the stage rather than disclose the denouement of the drama. That denouement, however, will in large part be determined by the "exchange of views" in the lovely little town at the foot of Lake Maggiore. There, where the majestic Alps fall away to the smiling Lombard plain, is a setting where at least nature has done her part for peace. If Stresa in springtime can not encourage constructive diplomacy, then the gift for it no longer exists in Europe.

Dr. Pak Chue Chan.

The greatest deliberative body in the world went into action on Tuesday and brought forth a piece of legislation for the District of Columbia. If accepted by the House this measure will exert considerable influence upon the life of at least one individual. For its sole purpose is to permit a Chinese physician to "practice the healing art" in Washington.

Dr. Pak Chue Chan, it appears, was out of the city when the time limit within which he could legally be granted a license to practice medicine here expired. Consequently, it was essential to divert the Senate from consideration of other issues and center its attention upon the desire of the doctor to practice his profession in the Capital City. Congress is already far behind in its legislative program. Its calendar is jammed with measures of the most far-reaching national and international importance. Yet in the midst of these complex and momentous issues the distracted Senate must turn its attention to the licensing of a medical practitioner in the District of Columbia.

On Capitol Hill this abuse of the legislative function is routine procedure. Doctors and other practitioners are frequently licensed in this way. Moreover, the Pak Chue Chan bill was accompanied through the Senate by two other measures that might well have been handled by subordinates in the District government. Why the Congress of the United States so tenaciously clings to its jurisdiction over these matters is impossible to understand.

Careful studies of the functions that should be exercised by the District Commissioners have laid a basis for reorganization of the local government. Congress ignores this urgent reform, apparently because Senators do not have time to rationalize Washington's governmental machinery. But the longer they delay that essential adjustment the more time they must waste licensing physicians and authorizing the laying of pipes under District streets.

It is almost unbelievable that a body with the tremendous responsibilities of Congress should choose thus to fritter away its time, instead of simply authorizing the local government to look after its own municipal affairs.

Unnecessary Suspicion.

The President has been placed in a rather awkward position by being vested with the power to spend nearly $5,000,000,000 in advance of any decision as to the methods to be employed in disbursing this vast sum. He will, of course, wish to dissipate any suspicion that he intends to use the spending power at his disposal to influence Congress on the unfulfilled legislative program.

A mere suggestion that funds for certain States might or might not be forthcoming, if certain Congressmen voted for or against a particular measure, might be sufficient to affect certain susceptible legislators. For that reason, it is most important that a carefully coordinated spending plan be announced with the least possible delay. That may appear to be an impossibly large order, but it is not so difficult as it seems. On the contrary, it is surprising that the President has vouchsafed so little positive information concerning his plans in view of the mass of information placed at his disposal by the innumerable planning agencies created in the past two years.

A considerable number of State planning boards, for instance, have made painstaking and valuable investigations into potentially desirable work-relief projects within their borders. The National Resources Board, which succeeded the National Planning Board, has done much to coordinate these local and State programs and to suggest ways and means of spending public funds with a minimum amount of waste and duplication of effort. With such data available, the President should not be at a loss to decide quickly upon the major details of his spending program, making it quite clear that the pork-barrel methods of expenditure that once had such power to influence legislative decisions have been definitely abandoned.

The sooner his decisions are known to Congressmen who may still harbor hopes that legislative docility is a prerequisite to obtaining largesse for their constituents, the better it will be for Congress and for the people. The general details of the relief plan should not only be outlined speedily. They should also be made public without delay in order to prove that the work-relief act will not be used as a rod with which to discipline or guide recalcitrant legislators.

Entrants For Bartlett's.

Someone, in some part of the land, at some time, is always picking out the "ten best" something or other. It may be the "ten best" women one prefers not to marry; the "ten best" kinds of soap to take to a desert isle; or simply the "ten best" horses one did not bet on. Critics can always fill in space with the "ten best" actresses and it is no great task for a reviewer to name offhand the ten books which, at best, should never have been published at all.

Now it comes to one man and one woman to pick out not merely ten, but a thousand or more, best bon mots for the newest compilation of Bartlett's "Familiar Quotations." To Miss Louella D. Everett and Christopher Morley has fallen the thankless task of reading, assimilating and tracing to their sources all the bright and brittle remarks of the last 20 years. This mammoth undertaking is guaranteed to make them as popular as the judges of a baby show.

The new editors expect the job to take them only two years at most. That is sheer optimism, in view of the fact that they expect to peruse the works of Gertrude Stein for potential "cheerful little earfuls." And then there are the witticisms of Dorothy Parker which, if collected en masse, would lay out all the people in New York City end to end. Also to be included is Pepys, on the strength of his "And so to bed."

All of which boils the whole business down to the lamentable fact that the very best bon mots will never find their way into the book. For, as every human being is ready to testify, the cleverest and most devastating bon mots are those which are thought of 24 hours too late to be said.

The Vote In Danzig.

From the New York Sun.

Europe, outside of Germany, receives with undisguised satisfaction news of the failure of the Nazi drive to gain complete control over the legislature of Danzig. The voting demonstrated that Germans of Nazi inclinations number approximately 3 out of every 5 of the city's population. But that ratio was not enough to give them the necessary majority in the Diet to pass constitutional amendments looking to the reunion of Danzig with Germany. What is most important, however, is the fact that the Nazi habit of victory seems to have been broken at a moment when breaking it was of psychological importance.

The high command of the National Socialist Party made every effort to win this election by a majority so big as to remove the last doubt that Danzig intends to be reunited to the Reich. If it had succeeded, the effect on the forthcoming international conversations at Stresa would have been prodigious. Since it did not succeed there will be time for Germany's neighbors, Poland especially, to get their breath and decide more calmly on the course their interests counsel them to take.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

"Foolish To Reply."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of April 6 there appears a letter from Mary C. Davis on the subject of "Drunken Driving," this being the same subject Prof. Phelps had discussed a few days earlier in his article.

It is foolish for anyone to reply to her letter. She has not given any evidence—Census Bureau or other figures—to prove the accuracy of her contention that drunken driving has not produced many deaths. Her letter gives a lot of figures which do not fall into line with a correct study of the situation. The question is how many less accidents would there have been if there had not been drunken driving. This question can not be answered by the census or any other bureau. The sentence in her letter, "therefore one is in just as much danger from accidental death in his own home as on the streets or highways," is sufficient proof of the inconsistency of her entire reasoning.

We will, however, give the lady credit for having some nerve, to put it mildly, when she publicly disagrees with the distinguished scholar and literary benefactor of thoughtful and appreciative readers in Washington and elsewhere. This writer would hesitate before assuming such responsibility.

R. LAPPIN.

Education In Prison.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Nothing is more important in American life than the treatment of criminals and their possible rehabilitation." This utterance by the Hon. Homer S. Cummings before the General Assembly of North Carolina recently indicates that the Attorney General of the United States is a statesman of the wider vision. It reveals him as an official with a mind and a sense of social service that goes somewhat beyond the perfunctory duties of his high office. Mr. Cummings has very properly concluded that the apprehension and punishment of criminals is not the final end of justice, but that the reformation of the culprit is a governmental and sociological function of paramount importance.

It is an unfortunate fact that in our jails and penitentiaries a great educational opportunity has long been ignored. Very indifferent endeavors to temper justice with the merciful dispensation of educational uplift have been made. Punishment of the criminal has been the preponderant purpose, and, thus on the whole, has resulted in his brutalization and the accumulation of multitudinous social liabilities.

The principal purpose of a penitentiary should be to dismiss inmates better men than when received. This is what the Attorney General had in mind in his remark quoted above. B. A. BANKS.

Norfolk, Va., April 8.

Reduced Pensions.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We should like to direct attention to the extreme situation of the men who have been disabled in the regular armed forces of the United States. The New Deal has been harsh with them, and greatly increased the suffering among these faithful old soldiers and their families. The pay of the regular enlisted men has never been high enough so that they could reasonably assume the risk of disability from their own resources. Civilized governments from the days of the Roman Empire have assumed this obligation, and enlisted men have looked upon this protection as a part of the consideration for which they served.

On March 20, 1933, the average monthly pension of the disabled regulars was $19.65. At the present time it is $18.42. The latter figure is not confined to the men affected by the "Roosevelt raise," and includes the men pensioned prior to 1898, and excludes the large number that were wiped off the rolls entirely.

In considering any reduction, it should be remembered that it is not from modern standards, but from the standards of living as prevailing in the ox-cart age. Thousands of regulars have been killed or maimed in the development of our aviation defenses, thousands of others have died or suffered extreme disability from tropical sickness. Explosions and the general hazards of military service have accounted for the others. Regular soldiers are average American citizens, not inferior citizens. They served with honor and maintained the highest American traditions.

WALTER JOHNSON,
National Commander, the Regular Veterans Association.

Clarendon, Va., April 6.

It Worked.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I'm not in the habit of writing letters to people I don't know, but this morning I feel rather grateful to Mr. Bennings, of The Post. I needed what, to me, was a lot of money and didnt see any way of finding it, so I went to Bowie yesterday for the first time and came home with more than I needed—thanks to his column.

Had the first six races straight and the daily double. If Mr. Bennings makes mistakes sometimes—or I should say, if the horses do—he can sleep peacefully, because he certainly saved, at least, one very bad situation yesterday.

Incidentally, the horses are swell, aren't they! I would like to know how they get the coiffure on their manes! ANOTHER AMATEUR.

Washington, April 7.

"Strike" Is Their Word.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial of April 5, entitled "Common Sense," commenting on the antiwar demonstration to take place in the high schools and colleges throughout the country on April 12, you referred to this movement as a "strike." I don't think the students who plan to take part in this demonstration plan to leave their classes and participate in a disorderly fashion as your use of the term "strike" and your editorial infer.

Your editorial suggested that representative committees of students meet as "pacifists discussions." This would be all very well, but something stronger than a discussion is needed to unite the students of this country and others in a feeling of determination against future wars. In a demonstration as planned the sentiment of American youth will be felt, whereas a discussion group, as you suggested, does not reveal the strength of the majority of the American youth in their opposition to war, as an instrument of national politics.

It is going to take the united action of the students and youth of the world to outlaw war, and that is primarily what this movement is trying to do. If the youth of this country and others expose their strength on a common front, they will be doing more than statesmen and diplomats could do in a century. WALTER H. DUFF, JR.

University, Va., April 5.

Against Daylight Saving.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No one has so little sense as to believe that turning the clock hands will make the sun, moon and stars hustle earlier, or the crops grow any faster.

Any one with ordinary "horse sense" knows that a housekeeper, laborer, farmer, or even the pleasure seeker, when he has an unusually long task to perform, or an extra number of miles to do, does not turn his timepiece ahead, but just rises an hour earlier if necessary.

A WORKER.

Washington, March 30.

Not Merely Stomach Trouble

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to congratulate Roy H. Everett for protesting your editorial of April 6, re Mr. Hopkins, so-called "white collar aid." Mr. Gratham need not fear that this polyglot America will ever be turned over to theorists or idealists! There is no danger whatever of the return of the heroic or Elysium days of Greece or the Roman days of Augustus Caesar and Agrippa or of Hadrian, or of the later Italian Renaissance. Each of these high spots in human advancement were created, led, governed and delivered to posterity by idealists, creators of the first order.

Mr. Everett was 100 per cent right, and by the same token Mr. Gratham 100 per cent wrong. Mr. Hopkins has been guilty of an excess of human sympathy and yielded always to the immediate physical need. As director of projects in Texas for a few months, a year ago, I became practically acquainted with his work and I say he has erred on the side of the humanitarian in feeding the belly of this Nation, laboring for the physical comfort of too many whose only interest was self with neither desire nor willingness to give their labor to put their own home, town or State in order.

We have taken the tramp into our home—warmed, fed and bedded him down. We have let him wander away still a tramp, to fill his belly at the next door or public trough. America will get out of this slough of indecision, which is all that ails it, sometime, but never by treating our ailments as simply stomach trouble, or in national business as simply material difficulties.

I fancy Mr. Hopkins has learned how selfish and unscrupulous every political machine in every town in every State can be; that he will have to drive in future his Pegasus with a curb and a tight rein. He will have to fill his field offices where the real work lies with trained men, executives with courage and with power.

I imagine the success of his great opportunity will depend on the work outside of Washington. He will have to enlist men and women of creative minds, executive sense, who have mortgaged their souls to become fit, to learn, to know, to show the way. He, no doubt, alone shares with the President the confidence necessary on the Hill to have passed the big works bill and we should not forget that the heart and the mind of America, though hesitant, are still with us, and must and will again prevail.

Lean Years And Longer Lives.

Post Office, Thursday.

NOW it is England's turn to worry over a declining birth-rate.

Long before the World War, France was bothered about the decrease of its population. A few months ago, Italy found a similar cause for disquiet. Then France again—no longer ago than February last—was disturbed on the subject.

Mussolini spoke for Italy's fears: his words will be remembered. The Gallic voice was Marshal Petain's—but, somehow, the American newspapers rather missed it. Now our press has also rather missed the significance of the figures recently made more or less public by the British Registrar-General—even if he is not at all, like Marshal Petain, a military general!

The Marshal spoke through the columns of France's great review, the Revue des Deux Mondes—his topic, the "Lean Years of France." It hastened that vote of the Chamber of Deputies which approved Foreign Minister Flandin's plan to strengthen the Army "in those coming times when the shortage of recruits will make itself felt." Hitler's latest dramatic gesture followed.

The Marshal's point was that, because of the decline in births during the years of the World War, the yearly contingent of recruits under the old French statute, would drop to 120,000 between 1936 and 1940, whereas the normal figure was 240,000. Some expectation there had been that the recruit-slack might be taken up by voluntary re-enlistments, but the expectation perished when, during the whole of last year, a mere 20,000 offered themselves for a further service-term.

It was to remedy this that M. Flandin's law was proposed—and passed by the substantial majority of 144 votes. The soldiers enrolled in April will serve for 18 months only; from October next the service-period will be two years in length.

Now come those figures of the British Registrar-General—and they demonstrate that at least the English, as a peopole, "are growing older." Their 1934 birth-rate remained low; still lower was their death-rate. Fewer children, more old men and women: "the average age of the population is rising."

Not that there aren't what big population enthusiasts call compensating circumstances:

Until 1934 England's lowest infant death-rate ever recorded occurred in the five-year period of 1901-1905: it stood at 138 per thousand live births. Last year, however, the figure fell to 59.

Moreover, the general death-rate has also been shrinking. At 16.1 per thousand of the population in 1901-1905, it sank to 11.8 in 1934—a mere 0.4 higher than the record, which was reached in 1930.

Notwithstanding all that, there are fewer and fewer babies in English cradles. During the period of 1900-1902, the birth-rate was 28.6 to the thousand population. During 1934 it was 14.28. In other words, English births have been halved in 23 years:

"This," says the London Times, "is a fall without parallel so far as is known in the history of this or any other country."

Of course, a lot of so-called explanations are forthcoming. When Mr. Pecksniff can't evade a disquieting fact—when he can no longer even "refuse to admit it"—then it is incumbent upon his peace of mind to "explain" it. So now England is hearing some talk of how, after all, "fertility rises and falls in waves the strength of which increases with periods of intellectual advancement and declines during periods of intellectual decline."

The application of this theory to our Machine Age is tempting. Nevertheless, the Post-Impressionist fails to find the broad hypothesis impressive.

Certainly its ability to withstand criticism depends upon what is meant by the term "intellectual advance." The Times, to our mind, gets nearer the mark when it contends that fertility bears a relationship to the standards of living plus the religious and moral ideals prevalent during the given period.

So the question is only partly economic. Low wages do not alone account for a decline. A decline of hope is to be considered: "Wages were very low during the early years of the nineteenth century (in England), but the birth-rate remained very high, and the population increased in spite of high death-rate." Why? "These were years of rising hope and of undimmed faith in (industrial) 'Progress.'"

It appears to the Post-Impressionist that the times of fewer births are the times when low wages seem to the workers to have come to stay. And, to the workers, the present time seems such a time.

* * *

For those who advocate a larger birth-rate comfort lies in the fact that all this seeming is transitory. Their comfort is proverbial: "Times change."

Britain Must Choose At Stresa Conference

Peace of Europe Depends On Course Selected Among Five Possible Alternatives.

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

SIR JOHN SIMON is back from Berlin, Antony Eden from Moscow, Warsaw and Prague. Germany, Russia, Poland and Szechoslovakia have all stated their cases to the British diplomats, and now England, Italy and France meet at Stresa. Says Mussolini, Stresa should put an end to this dangerous ideal of disarmament. Says M. Flandin, the French government will not cease in its efforts to group round itself a powerful block of the states which have preserved the same ideals as ourselves. What is England to say?

In England there is the usual welter of conflicting advice; out of this confusion come five possible lines of action.

• • • •

ENGLAND might join France and Italy in a military alliance, directed in fact if not in name against Germany. A military alliance means that a common strategy would be worked out between the different armies, navies and air forces, to deal with attack from Germany, or even, in the extreme case, to wage a preventive war against Germany.

This is an impossible solution. It would be a surrender to rash fear. It would be a complete and abject confession of failures to solve the political and psychological problems of Europe. And it would solve nothing. Short of the complete annihilation of the whole people, the end of a war is only the beginning of another peace in which all the old problems repeat themselves. The people of England will not agree to a military alliance.

The second proposal, put forward by some self-styled realists, is that England should line up with Germany. Before Hitler this would not have seemed so wild a suggestion as it does now. In a very short time after the last war the English realized that they thought as Teutons, not as Latins, and their sympathies with Germany grew all the time that they were allowing themselves to be dragged along in the train of France.

But sympathy always came too late, and delay in granting what England knew was just, and would some day have to be granted, led to accumulating indignation and hysteria in Germany, climaxed by the advent of Hitler, and repudiation of the most obnoxious clauses of the Versailles Treaty. An alliance with Germany is no longer possible, and indeed now would be not an alliance to deal justly with Germany, but an alliance to implement the braggings of a fanatic.

• • • •

THE third possibility is what is called collective security. The idea of this is that all the nations of Europe, or of certain areas of Europe, should mutually guarantee each other against possible aggression. It means the assembly of irresistible force against any nation which breaks the peace. It means putting teeth in the many peace pacts expressing general ideals which have been signed since the war.

Nations will not join a system of collective security unless they are satisfied that there are no serious economic and political problems to be solved, or that there exists some adequate mechanism for the adjustment of such problems as they arise. And the nations must also be far-sighted enough to be willing to put their military forces at common disposal.

The difficulty at present is that nobody trusts anybody else. Germany professes to hate and fear Russia. For the moment England seems to have reached complete agreement with Russia, but there is a powerful body of British opinion which expresses complete distrust of anything Russia may undertake. Today Russia's interests may be served by agreement with the capitalist countries of Europe, but who knows what she may want in ten years? Who can trust Italy's ambitions, to say nothing of the smaller but equally vociferous countries of Central Europe? And although many of these countries are eager to form a collective system to protect themselves against possible attack, how many are willing to see economic and territorial adjustments for the benefit of others.

In spite of all these difficulties, the most hopeful outcome of the present crisis would be a collective system of mutual guarantee, formed under the auspices of the League of Nations, open to Germany whenever she wishes to reconsider her present truculence, and paralleled by a declaration that Germany's proper complaints will receive fair treatment. This is the only solution that could be made acceptable to the English public, which is overwhelmingly pacifist and committed to the League of Nations, but to state the solution is to see how difficult would be its adoption.

• • • •

THE fourth alternative for England is preached by the Beaverbrook school of Splendid Isolationists. England must wash her hands of Europe, build a strong navy and air force, turn toward her own Empire. The overwhelming objection to it is that England can no longer isolate herself from Europe; that with England definitely neutral war would soon follow, and that England can not afford to be unconcerned about German hegemony in Europe.

Fifth, and most seductive of possibilities, is to do nothing. Pulled one way by the isolationists, another by the interventionists, and still a third by the supporters of a collective system under the League of Nations; unable to develop an arm policy because hatred of war is so pronounced, unwilling to follow the pacifist ideal, England may end by committing herself to nothing. By leading one side to hope for intervention, the other for neutrality, England would repeat the history of the last war and add enormously to the dangers of Europe.

• • • •

A COLLECTIVE system is the only solution. Experience has shown that overwhelming alliances directed against one power are bound to break down, and end in the war they can not avoid, yet there will be insistent demands for such alliances during the next few months.

The peace of Europe can only be kept if during the next three years some nation with a very level head dominates the councils of the nations with a determination to deal fairly with Germany in spite of her present hysteria, and with a mutual tolerance and good will. Fear must not be used to deny justice.

England is the only country that can play the part. Yet England hates to make up her mind, and would much rather drag along from day to day with a hope that things will save themselves. She is excellent at eleventh-hour displays of good sense. Can she develop and maintain a determined lead for peace?

If Europe is to be saved, England must rise to the occasion.

The Libretto.

BARGERON.

THOSE of us who have been listening for months to Mr. Roosevelt's humming of his $5,000,000,000 opera can appreciate Librettist Rex Tugwell's impatience to get into action. With the words to the music long drawn up he has been nervously pacing the floor wondering when permission would come for him to try them out. Day after day, one imagines, he would call Mr. Roosevelt up and say: "Really, it is the best libretto I've ever done. Why not let me spring it."

For reasons generally understood, however, Mr. Roosevelt wanted to keep the professor in the background as long as possible. It was only after he had signed the bill that the signal to go ahead went out. Whereupon the professor hied himself, of all places, to Rochester, N. Y., for his opening night. He may as well have opened in Oshkosh or Kalamazoo. Viewed in any light his effort was a flop.

• • • •

The professor's work in this instance proves indisputably, I think, the utter absurdity of English operas. The language simply does not lend itself to them and inasmuch as no one can understand the singers anyway, why not keep the words in the romance language of rhythm.

One has only to cite the prologue from the professor's libretto to prove this case.

The works program he defines as "standing aside from and supplementing a coordinated economy for major commercial production and an unplanned, unregimented, individualistic economy in every other field."

Of course, none of us opera lovers expects it to make sense but what is really exasperating is that it does not rhyme. Go to the piano now and try to turn these words in your throat to any tune. You would have tonsilitis before you were half way through.

One appreciates the reluctance of the professor to use a foreign language, French, Spanish or Italian, of course, because he is trying to sell himself, although a widely traveled, cultured man, as at heart an American tiller of the soil. But, after all, he has his reputation as a liberttist to preserve. If this preserves it, I will eat my hat.

• • • •

The trouble, one fears, is that Mr. Roosevelt has kept this gentleman silent entirely too long. He did excellent work on Mr. Roosevelt's first operas. His "More Abundant Life" was as pretty as anything one ever listened to, and while it was done in English it had enough of the Russian mystic about it to lend it to the musical tongue.

This thing he has now is a conglomeration, which raises a doubt as to whether it would be translated into any other language.

Incidentally, the title to it is "The Third Economy." Listen to some more of it. This "Third Economy," he sings, "belongs neither to private profit nor to State socialism" but can be "invoked on the basis of sound historical experience to justify enthusiasm for the program of public works and rehabilitation by which the present Administration is combating the depression."

• • • •

Something of the old professor appears in his refusal to prophesy the changes in our social and economic life which the works program may bring, and in his assertion: "Yet it is altogether possible that this system will be the means by which we reconcile and assign the respective spheres of what we call socialism and what we call individualism."

The high-note in this revival of Tugwellism is his aria about our present unemployment being not a liability but the greatest of our potential resources. There are so many things we can do with them. He means himself and Mr. Roosevelt.

It would be better had the professor waited awhile before presenting this opus. By no conceivable stretch of the imagination is it worth $5,000,000,000 or the $1,000,000,000 portion which he is to get. Is it possible, as was said of Verdi before his "Aida," that he is all washed up?

"Calling car 48! Don't sit there, stupid—DO SOMETHING!"

No End of Books

The Craft Of Playwriting; S. N. Behrman's "Rain From Heaven;" And Some Quaint Definitions.

By Theodore Hall.

I DON'T suppose there is a harder literary row to hoe than that of being a successful, or at least a reasonably self-supporting, playwright. Poets are notorious as inhabitants of garrets, but the point is that they can at least keep on inhabiting — this or that magazine will pay them $20 or $30 for a piece of verse, and the sums buy a good quantity of bread. But the playwright (though, of course, there are the rare little back-door jobs of writing skits for high schools and embattled amateurs) has to succeed at once with a Broadway splash and handsome royalties, or provide himself with the pleasant shade of a father's or wife's income, or take up chemical engineering. Almost literally, it is a game where you either win, and win resoundingly, or you don't get anywhere at all.

To be sure, there are people with a finger in the pie of playwright instruction who will tell you differently. And as we have to have playwrights—a country of 125,000,000 seems to need between a dozen and fifteen—there is a certain amount of value in watering the hope which springs eternal in the human breast. But just as we print more books on chess than we have good chess players, so there is a margin of the playwright manuals left over. That margin ought to exist—(1) For people who will like a play better for having some notion of how it was put together and why; and (2) for would-be short-story writers. For if you are going to take up that ubiquitous craft and study it by any other means than the straight one of simply writing short stories, the composition of plays is the ticket. Clarity, economy and efficiency in getting a story idea across to the reader are the values to be gained.

All of which—with a passing bow to one of the classic books in the field of playwriting, the late George Pierce Baker's "Dramatic Technique"—leads up to a little volume in hand.

• • • •

IN 1928 the Mask and Wig Foundation at the University of Pennsylvania invited some practicing playwrights to inaugurate a new sort of playwriting course. There was good omen in the event, because it was at the College of the U. of P., back in the eighteenth century, that our native American drama got its start—in Thomas Godfrey's play, "The Prince of Parthia," written under the direct inspiration of the college's first provost.

Jesse Lynch Williams, who in 1917 won the first Pulitzer Prize in drama, came and spoke on "Writing and Playwriting." Langdon Mitchell, author of "The New York Idea," our most slashing satire on divorce, contributed "Substance and Art in the Drama." With the title of "The Carving of the Ivory," Lord Dunsany brought his six-foot drawl into play on his confessions of a dramatist. Gilbert Emery, famous for his "Tarnish" and "The Hero," told all he could of his rraft in "A Play Is Presented." And Rachel Crothers, no doubt our leading woman playwright, gave her ideas under the title of "The Construction of a Play."

All professionals and successful ones, you see, and the atmosphere of the lectures made them peculiarly frank and plain-spoken. I don't know a better little book on the more personal side of constructing the drama than the one which holds these lectures—"The Art of Playwriting" (U. of Penn. Press, $2). It's seven years old, but don't imagine that all good ideas were copyrighted yesterday.

• • • •

YOU might find it interesting to trace their pointers on the craft in one of this season's outstanding successes, "Rain From Heaven" (Random House, $2), by that subacid and nimble playwright, S. N. Behrman. The author of "Second Man," "Serena Blandish," and "Biography" takes up the theme of the intellectual Jews exiled from Nazi Germany and fills the slight action of the play with his best brand of comment—the sharp fingernail in the velvet glove—on most of the world's current political "isms."

The chief character, an exiled music critic, is fashioned upon Alfred Kerr—dramatic critic and associate in Amsterdam of Thomas and Klaus Mann and other German expatriates. One of the narrated incidents of the play is based upon the friendship and sudden clash between Herr Kerr and Gerhart Hauptmann. In such a personalized conflict, Mr. Behrman finds a more moving drama than in mass or undistinguished reactions. He explains this in a characteristic bit of the preface:

"When one drunken moron (whether in dinner clothes or overalls) murders another in a brawl over a woman it is only a sanguinary bore. There is not here any of the dignity of tragedy. But should George Bernard Shaw, for example, have walked across Adelphi terrace one day and killed J. M. Barrie in a quarrel over Mrs. Patrick Campbell, that for the dramatist, would have been news. For it would have involved a struggle beyond the physical contrast between Mr. Barrie and Mr. Shaw. The tragedy would inhere not in the death of Mr. Barrie, regrettable as that might be, but in the sudden destruction of Mr. Shaw's acquired characteristics by his inherited ones.

"Such a destruction," he adds, "is visible in this poignant confrontation of Alfred Kerr and Gerhart Hauptmann." To which "Rain from Heaven" gives a masterly dramatization.

FOR dessert today let's have a peek at "A Connotary: Definitions Not Found in Dictionaries" (Crowell, $1). It's a collection of mild and not so mild witticisms, put together—youd' never guess unless you've been in the know—by that genial gentleman, John Garland Pollard, former Governor of Virginia. It's his hobby. Without describing them further, here's a sampling:

"Bigamy: Marrying a pretty girl and a good cook.

"Bonds of matrimony: Worthless unless the interest is kept up.

"Communist: One who has lost hope of becoming a capitalist.

"Courage: Holding on one minute longer.

"Hard times: When hitch-hikers are willing to go either way.

"Hospitality: The virtue which induces us to feed and lodge certain persons who are not in need of food and lodging.

"Knitting: Something for women to think about while talking.

"Mugwump: A man sitting on a political fence with his mug on one side and his wump on the other.

"Pedestrian: A man who has two cars, a wife and a daughter.

"Successful man: A man who does as much today as he plans to do tomorrow.

"Woman: An animal usually living in the vicinity of man, and having a rudimentary susceptibility to domestication."

That last is from Ambrose Bierce, who made much the same sort of "Connotary" in his "Devil's Dictionary" many years ago.

Justice Holmes

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

ON February 22, 1892, in Appleton Chapel at Harvard University, was held a solemn commemorative service in honor of James Russell Lowell, who had died during the previous summer; February 22 was his birthday. The services consisted entirely of music. I happened to enter the chapel directly behind the poet, humorist, novelist, essayist, physician, Oliver Wendell Holmes. He was then about 83 years old.

• • • •

In that winter I saw for the first and only time in my life, his son, Oliver Wendell Holmes. It was the annual banquet of the Yale Alumni Association of Boston, and Holmes was the guest of honor, representing Harvard. He was then only a little over 40, very handsome and dignified; and I remember his speech very well and the tones of his voice. It was a rather pessimistic view of the future he took in this address; a rather grave speech for an alumni banquet, but most beautifully and eloquently written; for it sounded as if it had been committed to memory.

It is interesting to remember now how steadily, as Judge Holmes progressed in years, he emerged from being the son of his father, and acquired fame in his own right. It is always difficult and sometimes humiliating to play the role of son to a distinguished parent, all the more so when one bears the same name. That evening when he spoke in Boston I heard people around me say, "That's the son of Oliver Wendell Holmes."

• • • •

It was not until he was over 60 that Americans stopped saying that; but they did stop. For Holmes became one of the greatest judges that ever adorned our greatest American court. It is perhaps more difficult to emerge from that select company than from any other. But for the last 20 years Holmes stood out in superb individual glory. His learning was matched by his wisdom; his opinions were weighty and often witty; he was a tremendous personality.

And he always stood for human freedom, for the rights of the individual.

He died on March 6, and was buried on his ninety-fourth birthday.

The best account of him that I have seen anywhere was published in The Washington Post on the day he died. It was written by a member of the staff of that paper, Franklyn Waltman, jr.

Rumor Of Long Third Party Plot Is Fishy

Mongers Of This Tale Do Not Know The Senator Or Politics Or History.

By Elliott Thurston.

Rumors persist that "certain interests," allegedly in New York, are secretly conniving with Senator Huey P. Long with the idea of projecting him as a third party candidate next year. The theory is that he would divide the New Deal vote and thus help to elect a conservative Republican. Like so many Washington rumors this one is too nebulous to be tracked down. It may be merely so much hot air. However, it not only persists but, rumor-like, takes on fresh color and impetus as it is bandied about.

Thus there seems to be some warrant for poking into it in the hope of getting it in some reasonable focus at least. By the latest twist, substantial "financial interests," inevitably in ever-politically iniquitous New York, stand ready to supply Long with ample funds to run a pre-convention and post-convention campaign—with money that would not have to be reported; indeed, with money so tainted that it could not be reported publicly.

• • • •

THE rumor appears to have originated from the circumstance that Long boasts of presidential ambitions and that a few misguided Republican Senators lately encouraged, if they did not actually combine with, his almost daily diatribes against Mr. Farley and much, if not all, of the New Deal. That was not very ennobling politics but it was natural for a decimated, floundering and helpless minority. It was easy to jump to the conclusion that the Republicans, some of them anyway, were in an unholy alliance with Long. Then, by an embroidery characteristic of such rumors, it was easy to take the next step and assume that "Wall Street" was at the bottom of a dark, if not very deep, plot.

Now there are several flaws in the rumor, in its pristine and more perfected forms. In the first place, Long is a wily politician. Clowning is part of his stock in trade, but he is no mere clown. Demagoguery he would not hesitate to turn to his own ends, but he is primarily a practical politician who does not propose to leave himself wide open for attack and exposure.

He cherishes a certain plausibility as a practical political asset, and one of the reasons why his "Share Our Wealth" crusade has been effective in mass appeal is that it is not readily answered. He stops far short of the Townsends and of others who are offering the impossible. He has made good use of the best statistical material available and has not departed so far from it to be easily argued down, logically, as a "wild man."

• • • •

WHETHER Long really thinks he might be a serious contender for the Democratic nomination is a matter of pure conjecture. Greater men have lost their sense of reality when the presidential bee has buzzed around their heads. Anyway, Long, ever garrulous, has made no secret of his thoughts. And he has told innumerable interviewers that he is aiming at the Democratic nomination in 1940, that he means to round up as good a showing of delegates as possible at the 1936 convention, not with any hope of capturing the crown, but solely to pave the way for 1940.

And he has been emphatic, indeed scornful, in knocking down the idea that he means to run on a third ticket in 1936. He has said over and over in private conversation that he is not going to be used as a cat's paw for the Republicans or anybody else—that he is playing his game for and in the Democratic fold.

Even if this be moonshine, there are other reasons why the rumor is doubious, to say the least. True, Wall Street, so-called, has been notoriously inept politically. True, Republican leaders who should have known better have sometimes tried oblique politics, as when they promoted the candidacy in Nebraska of a grocery clerk, named George W. Norris, in the hope that the identity of names would beat the Senator. But discreditable political maneuvers of this sort have more often recoiled on than advanced the interests of those engaged in the chicanery. The Norris episode was a deadly boomerang.

Now it may be that there are Republican leaders or Wall Streeters so reckless or stupied as to think they could engage in a secret cabal with the dangerous and talkative Long. But that is at least open to doubt. If they did, and it were exposed by an investigation, as would be almost sure to happen, the boomerang effects would be terrific and damning for all concerned, including Long. He is not that blind, even if there are would-be plotters who are.

• • • •

AGAIN, it by no means follows that a Long third party would have the effect alleged. Far from dividing the New Deal vote, it might well serve to scare the conservative vote into the New Deal camp. For if the choice were between the left wing represented by Long, a middle ground occupied by Roosevelt and a right wing candidate—heaven knows who it would be—the mass rush might very well be to the middle to avoid the extremes.

Put otherwise, it is not at all reasonable to suppose that Republican or conservative chances would be improved by having such a third party in the field. On the contrary, the outlook for a conservative ticket might be far better in a straight-out contest between the New Deal and a party representative of the business-banking sentiment of the country.

Such is the vitality of rumors that they are not readily scotched, but this one does not deserve to be swallowed at a gulp by any save the most gullible. Those who are credulous enough to believe this one do not know Huey Long—or politics, or political history.

BEN JONSON was a gifted bard who turned out verses by the yard, and now and then he reached such heights as disconcerted rival wights. And there were men who made the claim that he deserved Bill Shakespeare's fame. From all we know of Bill's career he was a favorite, a dear, a modest sort of writing crank, who had no use for "side" or "swank." But Jonson bragged of his own verse, and thought all other rhymes were worse. Invited to a lunch or tea, he bored the wilting company by boasting loudly of his plays, his sonnets, epigrams and lays; he would not listen to a word in praise of any other bird; he was the master, he alone should occupy the poet's throne. There are some letters still extant which tell how Jonson used to rant, assailing all who might aspire to wrestle with the poet's lyre. While he was stepping wide and high this sort of thing might well get by, for people will excuse the sins of any delegate who wins. And for a time old Ben was gay, for all things seemed to come his way and flatterers were at his heels with highly eulogistic spiels. But Fortune dumped him in old age, and then the poet and the sage was writing notes in his despair, and begging handouts, here and there. And to his sorrow and surprise no fellows seemed to sympathize; they all recalled the days of yore when he had been the champion bore, and so they left him to his grief and didn't send him pies or beef. The modest man whose heart is sore can comfort get, but not the bore.

Flowers sent from all parts of world surrounded casket, and throngs passed by in silent grief as the body of Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, lay in state yesterday.

Tribute Is Paid Adolph S. Ochs At Chattanooga

Body of Publisher Placed on Train for New York After Simple Service.

By the Associated Press.

Chattanooga, April 10.—The life of Adolph S. Ochs was held up as a model for young men today as the town where he made his start bade him farewell after a simple funeral service.

A rabbi and a Presbyterian preacher joined in eulogizing the Chattanooga and New York publisher as a journalist, philanthropist and humanitarian before a congregation made up largely of old friends, associates, and employes.

The services were held in the temple Mr. Ochs built in honor of his parents.

Afterward a lengthy funeral cortege escorted the body to the railway station, where it was placed aboard a train for New York.

Hundreds Pay Respects.

Hundreds, many of whom had been unable to gain admission to the limited auditorium of the temple, stood outside the gates to pay their last respects as the train departed.

Final rites and burial will be held in New York Friday.

Rabbi Abraham Feinstein opened the services. Six tapers burned at the head of the simple gray casket and at its foot lay a spray of snapdragons and pink roses from President Roosevelt.

Speaking part of the time in English and part in Hebraic, Rabbi Fienstein read: "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart shall receive the blessings of the Lord; mark the perfect man; behold the upright man, for the end of that man is peace."

City Chaplain Speaks.

Dr. T. S. McCallie, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church and city chaplain, spoke a brief eulogy.

Adolph S. Ochs, he said, "did what so many failed to do. He made his dreams, his visions and his ideals come to pass."

"He was a great man, a great American and a great Jew."

Fishing Comes to Fore As Recovery Remedy

By the Associated Press.

Representative Hoffman (Republican), Michigan, made this suggestion to the House yesterday:

"Buy fishing tackle for all the boys of the country to relieve unemployment."

He would give them a "two-bit" pole apiece, a dime's worth of linen line, a nickel's worth of sinkers and let them dig their own worms.

Representative Ekwall (Republican), Oregon, wanted to know whether it was true that Michigan electors sent to Congress only the men who could tell the biggest fish story.

"The gentleman was born in Ludington, Mich," Hoffman replied. "Maybe that's why they sent you up here."

LOSE FAT
She Made Up Her Own Mind —Note The Results
"I started taking Kruschen 3 months ago. They are wonderful. I have reduced 15 lbs. I now weigh nearly 130 and am getting nearer my average weight. I had been bothered with hives and gastric pains which now are gone." Mrs. Naomi McKay, Lake Stevens, Mich.
There's a million women—yes—and men, too—who could have lost 15 pounds of fat—fat that drags them down—tires them out—and makes life a burden.
They could have lost it just as easily as Mrs. McKay did and probably quicker, but someone who loves to gossip told them that losing fat the healthy way was dangerous—so they keep lugging it around—and the gossipers who told them to beware are laughing at them.
To fat men and women who have a mind of their own this may interest you—if you don't lose at least 12 pounds of fat with one jar of Kruschen Salts and feel better than you did a month ago—money back—it's the little daily dose that does it—one-half teaspoonful in a cup of hot water every morning before breakfast—it tastes better when you add the juice of half a lemon.—Adv.

Freight Vessel Feared Awash Off Maryland

Cases of Alcohol Cast Up by Surf Believed Cargo; Guard Investigates.

By the Associated Press.

Ocean City, Md., April 10.—The Coast Guard station here was ordered today to investigate the presence of a freighter, believed to be in trouble, located about 10 miles off the coast here.

More than 800 gallons of grain alcohol in cases has washed ashore between Ocean City and Frederick Island lighthouse during the past 24 hours, and Coast Guardsmen expressed the belief today that the freighter may have been the source of the alcohol.

It was impossible to launch a boat this afternoon because of heavy seas piled up by a stiff northeast breeze, but it is planned to get the boat started out to the vessel tonight or tomorrow. Capt. T. T. Moore, of the Ocean City station, said it is possible to see from the shore that the freighter is awash, but it is not known if she is anchored.

The alcohol was seized by Coast Guardsmen and has been sent to a larger station for safekeeping.

'Twas tugwell and the nira codes
Did peek and richberg in the holc:
All fera were the new tax loads,
Just Greek to common folk.

Alice, you remember, couldn't make head or tail out of "Jabberwocky" until she held it up to a mirror. Then it became perfectly legible . . . just like alphabet soup.

That's the trouble with the Washington Political Wonderland. It has to be explained. The amateur dinner table explainers do such a poor job of it, because it was explained to them only last week.

But The Washington Post has a little mirror to reflect the passing political show in order that you may understand why the Bumpstead bill was thrown out the window, and why lame duck Senator Sorehead was given a crutch. Better still, this little mirror tells you Who Said What and Why during those fateful hours before the reporters arrived on the scene.

This magic mirror, of course, is The Post's column, "Between You and Me," and the chief mirror polisher is none other than Raymond Clapper, that famous newspaperman who cut his eyeteeth on a portable typewriter and who has covered more political affairs than the shadow of Sir Basil Zaharoff. Clapper knows Washington so well that he could be blindfolded and still find his way to any given office in the Department of Commerce Building. He keeps his ears and eyes open, however, and he sees and hears more than a censor at a burlesque show.

Clapper covered his first National political convention in 1920. He yawned through the 1924 Democratic Walkathon while Alabama was casting those 24 votes for Oscar W. Underwood. In 1928 and 1932 he was again in the Press Box, and he reported the 1930 Naval Conference in London when American diplomats sank battleships to please Europe and European statesmen sank putts to please themselves. His book, "Racketeering in Washington," was such an expose of Nepotism that a certain Congressman fired six relatives in one afternoon. Clapper traveled more than 10,000 miles last year to learn the state of the Nation, and he covered the San Francisco general strike. For years, he was chief of the United Press' Washington Bureau. His by-line is world famous.

And his column, "Between You and Me," is required reading for the Man-Who-Must-Know. Clear, accurate, interpretative, Clapper's articles give you the Low Down on the Higher Ups, the running account of the New Deal, the back-stage scenes of the political Show-Shop. Larger Banks Voted a Bigger Insurance Levy House Group Would Cut Share Paid by Small Institutions.

By the Associated Press.

A change designed to make big city banks bear a much heavier share and smaller banks a much lighter share of the cost of deposit insurance was written into the omnibus banking bill yesterday by the House Banking Committee.

A part of the change was made at the suggestion of Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; some of it was made over his protest.

As the law now stands, a bank which has a $100,000 deposit may, under certain conditions, join the FDIC and get $5,000 of that deposit insured. However, the bank pays only one-half of one per cent on the $5,000, for the insurance.

The Banking Committee yesterday voted to make the assessment annual and mandatory, to fix it at one-eighth of 1 per cent and to make it cover all deposits.

Under this charge, a bank with a $10,000 deposit would pay one-eighth of 1 per cent of the $10,000, a bank with a $5,000 deposit would likewise pay the same percentage.

Pays on Entire Sum.

But small town and rural banks have deposits of much lower average than some big city institutions. They have had to pay the insurance premium on virtually all their deposits. A big city bank with a $500,000 deposit paid the assessment only on the first $5,000 of that deposit; it now will pay the assessment on the whole $500,000.

Urging the committee to adopt an assessment rate levied on total deposits instead of just the insured deposits, Crowley said:

"To base assessments solely on the first $5,000 of each depositor's account places an undue burden upon the small banks, since most of the accounts of these institutions are less than that amount.

Benefits Claimed.

"The benefits of deposit insurance are not limited solely to the protection of the individual depositor. The entire banking structure of the country is so intimately interwoven that a disturbance in any part of the system may cause repercussions of far-reaching proportions.

"The benefits which will accrue to the large city banks because of greater stability to the country banks are real and tangible."

The committee heeded his suggestion. But he had recommended that the total assessment be one-twelfth of 1 per cent, and as the language in the omnibus bill was drafted, the FDIC board could have avoided charging even that amount. It could have paid deposit insurance out of its capital and made no assessments.

Eccles Session Monday.

The banking committee not only changed the percentage to one-eighth of 1 per cent but also wrote in the bill a stipulation making mandatory collection of the assessment each year.

Meanwhile, Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, said yesterday he had deferred until Monday the meeting of his Senate banking subcommittee to consider the long-pending nomination of Marriner S. Eccles, of Utah, as governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

The meeting had been planned for Friday, Glass said, but two members anxious to attend could not be present that day.

Glass has held up action on Eccles for many weeks while he investigated his record and attended to other pressing duties.

Alleged Thief Escapes From New Georgia Jail

Macon, Ga., April 10 (AP).—Arrested recently in Richmond, Va., with Leland Harvey and Aubrey Smith, pardoned Georgia robbers, Joel Randall escaped early today from the new city jail here while awaiting trial on a charge of robbing the safe of the Southern Bell Telephone Co.

Officers said Randall must have had "outside help" to get away when he reached the roof of the jail, 40 feet from the ground. He had crawled through ventilators, a skylight, and between iron bars. Harvey and Smith are in jail in Atlanta awaiting trial in Federal court on a charge of robbing a national bank messenger, in Rome, Ga.

President Lifts Price of Silver To World High

Action Taken as Senate Group Schedules Wheeler Bill.

64½ cents an ounce, about 20 cents an ounce above the world price at the time the President issued his first proclamation on the subject.

In Line With 1934 Act.

The President's action yesterday, it was said, is in line with the silver act of 1934, directing the Treasury to continue purchase of silver until monetary stocks reach 25 per cent, with 75 per cent gold, or until silver reached a monetary value of $1.29 an ounce. Gold stocks have been mounting rapidly, reaching a record high this week of $8,599,742,909. Silver stocks on hand amounted to only $915,613,902. Assuming the monetary supply of gold remained at present levels, the Treasury still must acquire $1,950,967,067 more of silver ultimately to comply with provisions of the present law.

Reflecting continued Treasury silver purchases, the world price had moved up steadily in the last fortnight, and yesterday the price of foreign bar silver climber to 64¼ cents an ounce, an increase of 1¼ cents in a day, and the highest level reached since 1926.

The President's proclamation which followed ocers 71.11 cents an ounce for silver newly mined in this country, paying a bounty of more than 6 cents to domestic miners.

New Rate in Ecect.

Actually, the proclamation provides that the seigniorage collected at the mints on newly mined silver be reduced from 50 to 45 per cent. The new rate of seigniorage (that portion of the deposited silver which the Government collects for coining and profit), will take effect today.

Without detailed explanations, the proclamation merely states that "the interests of the United States" required further modification of the President's previous proclmation fixing 64.64 cents as the domestic price.

Originally, when silver was nationalized last summer, the Treasury paid only 50 cents an ounce in this country for stocks in the possession of American citizens. Approximately 112,594,155 ounces were purchased at that price. Although there are no official figures, the total volume of silver acquired from all sources, in this county and abroad, and at varying price levels, is believed in the neighborhood of 350,000,000 ounces.

Subsequent price rises have brought protests from silver-using China, which contended the American demand was draining silver from China and weakening their whole economic structure.

Previous to yesterday's presidential proclamation, the Senate Agriculture Committee had been summoned to meet this morning to vote on Senator Wheeler's modified silver monetization bill. There was no hint last night of any change in plans.

Preparatory to the committee action, Senator Wheeler yesterday conferred with other ardent Senate silverizers, and reviced his bill to provide for fixed monthly silver purchases by the Treasury, with a 16 to 1 ratio the ultimate goal.

A favorable committee report was anticipated by the 'silverites,' who had hoped thus to force the Treasury's hand.

Earlier, Senator Thomas, in letters to a number of outstanding and orthodox banking authorities, including experienced advisers to the Federal Reserve Board, voiced a hope for "the tarliest possible stabilization of world currencies."

Thomas offered to treat all replies as confidential, if these authorities would communicate their objectives to him. At the same time, the so-called inflationist leader outlined his own bi-metallic hopes, and his own preconcieved notions of what should be accomplished.

Sees Agreement.

"The United States having such a large proportion of gold and silver, we will not only be able to suggest stabilization, but in addition we will be able to secure a satisfactory gareement between and among the several nations in such stabilization conferences," Thomas wrote.

"If the nations can be brought into an agreement to use silver along with gold, it occurs to me that it will be possible to extend the stabilization agreement beyond the gold standard countries and to the silver standard countries.

"If the leading nations could be brought to such an agreement it would make possible the using of both gold and silver as basic ordinary money upon a fixed ratio. Then it would appear possible to create a world stabilization fund for use in buying and selling both gold and silver, as a means of preserving the fixed ratio between such metals."

Hrdlicka Skeptical Of Skull Evidence

If you believe a prehistoric negroid population existed in Scandanavia, or that nineteenth century Eskimos were racially identical with the cave dwellers of France about 12,000 B. C., most likely you are wrong.

Despite the fact that these statements have appeared from time to time in reputable textbooks, the Smithsonian Institution yesterday announced that the "skull reign" is rapidly coming to an end, and that the skulls of various races change as man marches on.

Formal protest against the old-fashioned skull treatment of civilizations was made yesterday by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology at the institution.

Skull changes are going on in the world today, Dr. Hrdlicka pointed out. Within the past few generations these have been noticeable among both Indians and Eskimos.

Enlarged CCC, Fast Spending, Roosevelt Aim

President Promises No Delay in Using Works Fund; Sees Advisers.

$947,000, in 1934, his survey showed. The figures for Maryland were $6,000,000 in 1935 against $5,130,000 last year. The District of Columbia was not listed in the tabulation.

Until the new works program begins to take effect, in most instances State funds will be spent cooperatively with Federal relief grants. Later, however, most of the State money will be used for the care of so-called "unemployables," who are being dropped from Federal rolls.

Both Hopkins and Rexford Guy Tugwell, Undersecretary of Agriculture, are expected to confer with Mr. Roosevelt on his works set-up, but neither appeared at the White House yesterday. Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes was among the first callers, but he departed silently.

Later in the day, a Congressional delegation representing drought-stricken States declared the President had lent a sympathetic ear to their appeal for a two-year allocation of $150,000,000 to alleviate the soil erosion that is causing dust storms in the West.

As spokesman for the group, Representative Marvin Jones, Texas Democrat who heads the House Agriculture Committee, said that Mr. Roosevelt had assured them as much money would be made available as "could be properly spent."

In the contingent were Senators Costigan and Adams, Colorado; Hatch, New Mexico; Gore, Oklahoma, and Shepherd, Texas; Representatives Martin, Colorado; Dempsey, New Mexico; Nichols, Oklahoma; Hope, Kansas, and Doughton, North Carolina; also Carl Hinton, of the Amarillo (Tex.) Chamber of Commerce.

Liquor Tax Evasions Get Grand Jury Action

Clarksburg, W. Va., April 10 (AP). The Federal grand jury today returned a partial report of 24 indictments, mostly for violations of the internal revenue laws, charging the manufacture and concealment of liquor on which the tax was not paid.

The jury returned two indictments charging John B. Laing, of Lewisburg, with evading income tax payments. One charges evasion of taxes of $7,042.02 on a net income of $67,445.43 in 1931. The other charges that Laing as president of the Nelson Fuel Co. failed to pay tax on a net income of $228,758.78.

Colombia's Cabinet Resigns En Masse

Bogota, Colombia, April 10 (AP). The Colombia cabinet presented its mass resignation last night to President Alfonso Lopez.

Political observers said they considered the resignations were prompted by the ministers' desire to give the president complete freedom in selecting ministers to help him with the problems created by the local elections next month.

Death Penalty Imposed.

Teachers Are Spared Dressing Like Flag

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., April 10.—Illinois school teachers had a narrow escape today from the necessity of dressing like the "Star-Spangled Banner."

During House consideration of a bill requiring public school teachers to take an oath of allegiance, Representative E. E. Laughlin, an opponent of the measure, introduced an amendment which would have compelled men teachers to "wear red, white and blue collars, and women instructors, red, white and blue cuffs."

In a gale of laughter, the House adopted the amendment by voice and vote, and the speaker solemnly declared it adopted.

But a record vote was demanded, and the collars and cuffs proposal lost, 61 to 4.

Fiance Awaits Roosevelt 'Yes'

Rome, April 10 (AP).—Massimo Treves said tonight his marriage to Medera Roosevelt, 17-year-old daughter of George Emlen Roosevelt and distant relative of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, depends on the consent of the girl's parents.

The prospective bridegroom, who is employed in the Rome branch of the large Italian insurance company of which his father is a director, said he was hopeful this consent would be given.

The 29-year-old Treves said everything was all rgiht as far as his own parents are concerned. He met Miss Roosevelt while he was studying at Rome University.

Earlier this week Medora Roosevelt's sister, Margaret, 19, announced her engagement to an Italian youth, Alessandro Pallavicini.

The girls' father is a second cousin of the late President Theodore Roosveelt.

The Pattons Leave Soon For Hawaii

Colonel and Family to Depart Monday for Pacific Post.

Will Visit Mrs. Waters at Fort Riley; Officer to Sail Boat to Isles.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society is about to lose one of its most popular families. Lieut. Col. and Mrs. George S. Patton, who, with their daughter, Miss Ruth Ellen Patton, will leave Monday for Hawaii.

The Pattons have been stationed in Washington for several years and have taken an interest in equestrian activities. Col. and Mrs. Patton being joint masters of the Cobbler Hunt, one of the oldest in the country, and their daughter, who was presented to society last winter, showing her mounts in the local and nearby horse shows.

Until Col. Patton was detailed to Fort Myer, Va., the family occupied the beautiful estate, White Oaks, on Cleveland avenue, where their other daughter, Mrs. John Knight Waters, the former Miss Beatrice Patton, made her debut two seasons ago. Mrs. Waters also was an ardent horsewoman, and on her visit to Washington during the Christmas holidays spent much time on the bridle paths of the Capital and near Fort Myer.

To Visit Daughters in Kansas.

Col. Patton has been transferred to Schofield Barracks, T. H., and on Monday he and his family will start on their trip to the coast stopping briefly in Fort Riley, Kans., for a visit with Lieut. and Mrs. Waters. Lieut. Waters will be graduated this spring from the Cavalry School at Riley, and will be assigned to the Thirteenth Cavalry at the same post. Miss Ruth Ellen Patton probably will linger longer with her brother-in-law and sister, to enjoy some of the fine riding which Fort Riley boasts and will then go to join her parents in the Hawaiian Islands.

In the meantime, Col. and Mrs. Patton will continue tehir trip to San Pedro to await the arrival of the sturdy 52-foot sailing ship the Arcturus, which the colonel has recently purchased, and which is being moved to the West Coast by steamer. Col. Patton is an enthusiastic boatman as well as a horseman. At their summer home, Green Meadows, in South Hamilton, Mass., there were three smart boats, two sloop yachts, the Duntesk and the Ventura, and a schooner yacht, the Moku II, which the entire family enjoyed in the Northern waters.

Will Sail Own Boat to Islands.

So Col. and Mrs. Patton, with Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Price, of Boston; Mr. Joe Eckland, and one other person not yet named, will set sail the end of the month on the voyage to Hawaii, which will take them three or four weeks. It is a unique plan and nobody could possibly enjoy the experience more than will Col. and Mrs. Patton. Their daughter will follow later by steamer.

As leader of a tank corps in France, Col. Patton moved in front of his big engines of destruction on foot, armed with only a riding crop. At Varennes he was wounded and received the Distinction Service Cross, Silver Star citation for gallantry, and the Distinguished Service Medal.

When the Patton family reaches Schofield Barracks they will find a life which they will all thoroughly enjoy. The post is about 25 miles from Honolulu, on a high plateau in the mountains. There is fine hunting and riding in those hills, and through the surrounding pineapple and cane fields. Also there is excellent polo, which no doubt will attract the colonel. So, although it is regrettable to lose this delightful family, it is pleasant to know that they are going to such an ideal post.

Faith Baldwin Gives the Answers to Questions of Winning and Keeping Your Man

Author Warns Single Girls Against Glamor

Declares Victorian Women Had Right Idea on Marriage.

By Elizabeth Young.

THE INTERVIEW had pursued its routine course and was heading to a close.

Nice-looking 41-year-old Faith Baldwin, New York novelist, famous for her discovery and dissection of the wife-secretary triangle, had obligingly—sometimes flippantly, sometimes seriously—discussed Hollywood actresses and directors, the California climate; her early struggles for writing recognition; her four children; the books she has written, is writing and plans to write.

The difficulty of creating a hero without making him a sap; the ease with which a villain is made; the sickness-unto-death which overtakes her at having to match up a new eyes-and-hair combination for still another heroine; her favorite movie star, Myrna Loy; her favorite book in all the world, "The Corn King and The Spring Queen;" her house in Brooklyn by the Narrows where the big ships come in; her early morning writing habits (she's at her desk by 8); how many words she writes in a year ("—far too many—"); woman's most attractive age ("—every age is the most attractive age of a really attractive woman—");

Knew All the Answers.

In short, she had proven to a reporter's complete satisfaction that she, Faith Baldwin, either knew all the answers, or was willing to take a chance.

So—

"—And now, Miss Baldwin—ur—uh—just one more question——."

Miss Baldwin's eyes were friendly, encouraging, although the shadows under them were pitifully dark. Recuperating from a throat infection; ordered by the doctor to seek a change of climate, she had come, believe it or not, to Washington to see the cherry blossoms. Midnight rain was beating like hail against the window panes of her de luxe apartment in the Shoreham. The long coat of her navy blue and white pajama suit was drawn close under her chin.

"Yes——," urged Miss Baldwin, the aforementioned chin, quivering as a yawn was stifled.

"Tell me—you see, this question was asked our Miss Haworth (she conducts our problem column, you know)—how does just any girl get married: I mean, how does she get her man? I mean, how does she annex a husband? Do you know?"

Three Important Precepts.

"First, of course," replied Miss Baldwin, completely casual in the presence of this riddle of the ages; "first, of course, she must arrange to be in a position to meet many men. That's the first step—meet men, lots of men.

"The second rule is as old as Eve. It's important to make a man feel important.

"Third, she must be clever; but not too clever. She must be so clever she seems not so clever; not so clever as the man, I mean. Let her hide her light under a bushel, or whatever that phrase is in the Bible.

"Let her always remember that men are more conventional, more basically set, more sentimental than women; let her remember that they may conform, but they never change. Women change,

"Let her keep in mind they're scared to death of intensity in women. Oh, intensity is all right in its place; but keep it out of sight in the drawing room, on the golf course. Well, never mind, Clever women will know what I mean.

What Makes 'Em Click?

"But wait. Did I say its chemical affinity that makes 'em click and makes 'em stick? No? Well, it is. I also say the quality which makes for wifehood and permanent marriage is a really good disposition, a sense of humor, a sense of tolerance.

"I warn her against being glamorous. The word makes me sick at my stomach. I don't like glamour. Oh, it may be all right in its place, with $200,000 a year income and a big house, where she's not underfoot all the time. But just let her try being glamorous in a one-room, kitchen and bath apartment and see how far she gets with it. Glamour is nothing but dressed-up sex. Oh, sex is extremely important, I grant you. But a woman can't go on being glamorous forever. She's got to put on her house slippers and her curl papers sometime."

Having arrived at this intimate picture, it now became apparent that in Miss Baldwin's novelist mind all the unmarried girls in the world had procured themselves husbands by the formula prescribed. So she threw in a bit of advice on husband-holding.

"I think the Victorian woman had the right idea," she reflected. "She let papa know he ruled the roost. He did, financially. So what matter if papa went forth, kissing the little woman good-by, to do the champagne-in-the-slipper act? Mama, too, went forth in her phaeton, and like as not met the champagne-and-slipper lady in the park, riding in a buggy of papa's providing. Sure, she recognized her. But she never batted an eye.

Every Woman a Realist.

"She knew where she stood. She had everything on her side—the ring and the book; probably her children. She had the name. She had the home. She was completely the mistress of his house; she dominated in his kitchen and nursery. She knew that 'men are like that.' And she also knew he'd be back; reluctantly, maybe. But he'd be back.

"If the wife's a realist (and every woman is; when you see a woman dreaming it's because she has some practical end in view) she knows she holds every advantage for putting the Other Woman to rout. Man, conventional creature, is bound to his home by all sorts of ties stronger than sentiment. His children, his comfort, his habituation to his social orbit, these are the ties that bind if his wife doesn't cut the cord by bucking him; if she's smart enough to let nature take its course.

"The Other Woman is always the outsider, and she finds it out if his wife waits long enough and quietly enough and really wants him back.

"Wives and husbands can't expect to live always at mutual concert pitch, you know. But they should be able to laugh at the same things; they should have a certain tolerance for each other and for others. Children aren't essential to a happy marriage, but they can be an asset.

"And, by the way, if a woman isn't physically attracted to a man within a comparatively short time after meeting him, she never will be, basically. And sex, as I've said, is very important."

On which nugget of wisdom our pencil rested.

The Victorian woman had the right technique for holding a husband, says Faith Baldwin (above), famous New York novelist, who discovered and dissected the wife-secretary triangle.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Does Severe Criticism Voiced by Boy Friend Indicate Ardent Interest?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: When a man meets a girl, shows plainly he is very much interested in her, and then after about two months begins to criticize nearly everything she says and does, does that mean he is falling in love with her, or does it mean he is beginning to discover he doesn't like her?

• • • •

I am a very animated sort of a girl, popular with boys and girls, love to dance and be the center of a gay group. I like smart clothes, use makeup, smoke a little, drink a little, talk a lot about nothing in particular, and make no pretense of being anything but what I am—an average 20-year-old girl out for a good time in a nice way.

• • • •

This boy is rather quiet and serious. But when we started going together, he said he had never known a girl could be so much fun, so unspoiled and unself-conscious and friendly. He said I was the kind of girl he'd always been looking for.

• • • •

Now it's a different story. He makes me miserably self-conscious (because I've come to like him a lot) by saying I make myself too conspicuous in public, laughing and talking so much. He disapproves of the amount of make-up I use, scolds me for powdering my nose in public, scowls at most of my wisecracks; says I dress to look too much like a bean pole, and is generally dissatisfied with most everything I do.

• • • •

I don't know whether to take him seriously and try to conform to his ideas or whether to go on as I was before I ever met him. I am interested in holding him, however. Which, in your opinion, is the best attitude to take?

Two Possible Reasons.

DEAR CRITICIZED: When a man reacts in the manner described it may mean he is trying to hold himself back from falling in love by seeking flaws in the smooth surface of the magnetic object; or it may mean he is becoming increasingly annoyed at the discovery his idol has feet of clay.

• • • •

Idiosyncrasies of personality which please, even delight, on first acquaintance, have a way of becoming thorns in the flesh on continued association. While opposite temperaments often are mutually attracted, it's seldom they fraternize happily.

• • • •

In any event, I think this man's conduct disqualifies him for a permanent place in your love life. I think it would be a mistake to try to make yourself over to conform to his revised notion of what you should be to personify feminine perfection. You probably stand a much greater chance of holding his interest by maintaining your independence of personality than you would in refashioning yourself to fit his shifting pattern. M. H.

Style Show Depicts Past and Present

Models Representing Staid 50's, Sentimental 70's, Gay 90's and Modern Designs Shown at Church.

By Gertrude Hummer.

THE PAGES of the family album were turned back last night at the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church when members of the church appeared in costumes of the staid '50's, sentimental '70's and the gay '90's. The costumes revealed the progress of fashions as well as satirical ideas.

One of the oldest dresses displayed was a wedding dress of purple moire silk of the year 1852 modeled by Miss Elizabeth Brubaker. It was made in a very circumspect manner with a high neck, long sleeves and a very full, long skirt. The dress was made entirely by hand, for in those days sewing machines were unknown.

The spirit of the '70's was reflected in the gray high-necked dress worn by Mrs. Fred Morgan.

A Gown of the Gay '90's.

The first daring note in dresses—reminiscent of the Mae West era—was a gown of the gay '90's worn by Miss Louisa Stuart. It boasted of a low neckline, tight-fitting waist and skirt with a train. It was made of a black silk material with small ruffles of black lace.

Another interesting model was a gray gown of 1869 that was the wedding dress of the late Mrs. Samuel H. Goodman, who moved to the Mount Pleasant section as a bride and was one of the charter members of the church.

Little Miss Ann Morgan in a blue checked taffeta dress of the Civil War period was a fetching sight. This dress was one worn by Mrs. M. Ross Fishburn, widow of the former minister of the church, at the age of 6 years.

Modern Design Shown.

Others who took part in the fashion show were Miss Margaret Allen, Miss Ruth Riddle, Miss Genevieve Dillman, Miss Geraldine Dillman, Miss Jean Herron, Miss Ruth Kizer, Miss Marion Mansfield, Miss Pauline Gunn, Mrs. L. E. Purnell, Miss Margaret Irey, Miss Maxine Duvel and Miss Marjorie Stuart.

Modern designs for the spring and summer of 1935 were shown as well as dresses of the early '80's, and garments dating as far back as 1840. The show was sponsored by a committee of the Women's Guild of Mount Pleasant Church composed of Mrs. W. G. Stuart, chairman; Mrs. V. F. Rand, Mrs. R. H. Young, Mrs. Harold Allan, Mrs. G. B. Mansfield, Mrs. S. R. Jacobs, Mrs. E. C. Joss, Mrs. D. D. Brubaker, Mrs R. L. Dillman and Miss Jane Darby.

Excess of Red Corpuscles Breaks Health

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

WE may well marvel at the powerful forces of the body that keep the parts in proper balance. Not the least remarkable of these is the mechanism that controls the red cells of the blood. In health the number of cells produced by the bone marrow is exactly that needed and no more. In anemia the number is usually less than normal, and the ability of the cells to carry the red coloring matter of the blood is reduced.

A type of blood disease that is sometimes accompanied by a ruddy complexion is characterized by too many red cells. It bears a long name—polycythemia—meaning many cells in the blood.

Sometimes the condition is merely temporary. For example, if a large amount of fluids lost from the body through vomiting, diarrhea, or excessive perspiration, the red cells may be in relatively higher concentration. This situation, however, will promptly change as soon as the cause disappears and when the fluids of the body return to normal.

An increase in the number of red cells occurs also in normal persons who are subject to a change in altitude, as in traveling over a high mountain pass or going up in an airplane. This increase is not, as a rule, great but may be as much as 10 to 20 per cent. As soon as the individual returns to a comparatively low altitude the blood becomes normal.

Unfortunately, there is a chronic disease, the cause of which is unknown, in which the red cells remain at a consistently high level. The condition was first described by Louis Henri Vaquez in 1892. It is a disease of middle and later life and a family tendency appears to exist.

What Today Means

IF APRIL 11 is your birthday, the best hours for your an this date are from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m., from 3 to 5 p. m., and from 7 to 9 p. m The danger periods are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 5 to 7 p. m., and from 9 to 11 p. m.

Conditions conducive to the cross-tides of conflicting emotions will require the practicing of self-control if you wish harmonious situations to prevail. Avoid dwelling on any subject which may cause irritation or mental agitation. You will make a great mistake if you allow first impressions to influence your likes or dislikes on the date, for a careful analysis of individuality or an inanimate object may reveal perfections not apparent to the casual observer.

Courageous perseverance will be the prime requisite to successfully put over business deals on this date. In competition you may be up against the "go-getter" type of salesman, so emphatic statements, backed by enthusiasm, may be essential to get satisfactory results.

In social gatherings, it will be a mistake to sit back and let others do the entertaining. Active participation will increase your popularity. Married and engaged couples, as well as those engaged in fervent wooing, should be careful not to let impatience cause them to display any form of exasperation.

If a woman, and April 11 is your birthday, there are reasons to believe inspiration has planted many seeds of original ideas in your brain. Make good use of them. Hard work is required to accomplish anything worth while, but the ultimate reward usually is commensurate to the effort. Have confidence in your own ability to succeed. Do not turn a deaf ear to constructive criticism, but do not heed critical remarks of a discouraging nature. Through your own efforts you should be able to make a good deal of money.

Art, writing, sculpturing, designing and interior decorating offer your imagination an unlimited field for free play. Through a husband's devotion and encouragement your days may be made brighter.

The child born on April 11 usually, when it attains its majority, is a continuous source of gratification, as well as joy to its parents.

If a man, and April 11 is your natal day, you are gifted with some decided talent. Do not allow it to lie dormant. Today age should not prevent endeavor. The young can gain by striving, the older man has vast experience to help guide him. Literature, painting, journalism, moving pictures, as well as the radio, have wonderful openings for the man who has something new to offer. If you try hard enough to gain recognition, there is very little likelihood you will fail to win it.

Four Cards Required.

Since there are 13 cards in every suit, unless a player holds at least four some one else is sure to hold more than he. Naturally there is no reason for naming a trump suit in which you will not be stronger than any other player. Thus no suit can be considered biddable unless it contains at least four cards. This reasoning leads further to the requirement that a four-card suit, to be biddable, must contain at least the Jack and one higher honor—Q J x x or better.

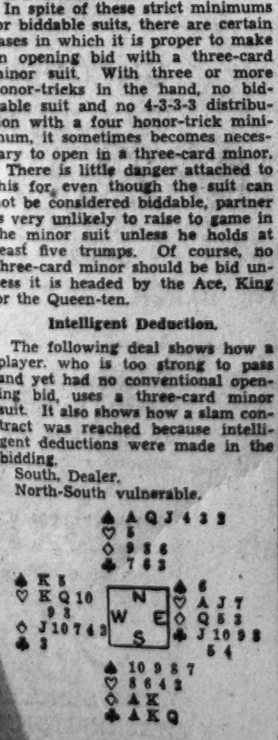
In spite of these strict minimums for biddable suits, there are certain cases in which it is proper to make an opening bid with a three-card minor suit. With three or more honor-tricks in the hand, no biddable suit and no 4-3-3-3 distribution with a four honor-trick minimum, it sometimes becomes necessary to open in a three-card minor.

There is little danger attached to this for, even though the suit can not be considered biddable, partner is very unlikely to raise to game in the minor suit unless he holds at least five trumps. Of course, no three-card minor should be bid unless it is headed by the Ace, King or the Queen-ten.

Intelligent Deduction.

The following deal shows how a player, who is too strong to pass and yet had no conventional opening bid, uses a three-card minor suit. It also shows how a slam contract was reached because intelligent deductions were made in the bidding.

South, Dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♣(1)	1♡	1♠	2♡
4♣(2)	Pass	5♣(3)	Pass
6♣(4)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—With four-plus honor-tricks and support for both majors South can not pass. As unbiddable major suit is never opened so his bid is right.

2—South can see strong slam possibilities. West having bid hearts and East having raised them, North can not hold more than one heart, if that.

3—South's raise to game is such a strong bid that North, with no outside strength, feels a slam is possible and a contract of five-odd is safe.

4—South bids the slam because he knows no trick can be lost in clubs or diamonds and at most one trick in hearts. North must have the spade Ace, because he could hardly have made a slam try without the Ace. At worst, the slam should depend upon a finesse.

The Play.

East opened the Ace of hearts and continued hearts. From this point on there was little to the play of the hand. North trumped the second heart lead, entered dummy with a diamond and took the spade finesse. While he considered the possibility of East's having the singleton King, percentages favored a finesse for the King when two partners hold ten cards of a suit. West's overcall, lacking the Ace of hearts, almost marked the King of spades.

This Product Changes Bath Into a Luxury

Milky Substance Scented With Pine Eases Pains, Softens Water.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

PONCE DE LEON, the story books say, came to this country in search of a fountain of youth, but alack and alas, found none. How much more fortunate are Washingtonians who with, with a drop or two of a certain magical essence, endow their baths with many "fountain of youth" properties.

They do this by means of a milky substance highly scented with the aroma of pine. A drop or two, and, presto! a mere bath is changed into a luxury. It becomes exhilarating, refreshing and healthful.

Not only does it make a bath a real bracer, by completely reconditioning a weary body and restoring wasted energy, but it also is excellent for the treatment of muscular pains, stiffness of the joints, bruises, chest pains and sore throat.

Last but not least, it softens hard water.

Milk-o-pine, as it is called, usually cost $1.50 a bottle. It is reduced now to 75 cents.

Knitting Box-Bags.

When is a knitting bag not a bag? When it is a box that looks like a bag and is used as a bag. Can you imagine such a thing? If not, drop by the notions department of a downtown store and see what's offered there.

Knitters are going for it in a big way because, after all, bags do have their inconveniences, but so far box-bags have developed none.

They are made from an attractive wear-ever fabric which has been attached to heavy cardboard. Because these box-bags are easily opened and ever so roomy, they are real helpers to the knitter.

Sachet and Perfume.

A French perfume house puts out a lovely violet toilet water which sells for $1 and a sachet of the same scent which costs 75 cents. At the present time, both sachet and perfume are on sale for $1.

The discriminating woman who wants to give a light floral fragrance to her clothes will find this a bargain. The price is lowered for only a limited time.

Cocktail Hour Glove.

The cocktail hour glove is the newest spring complement to lovely hands. And it has the added gift of making not-so-lovely hands look frail and flatteringly feminine.

These fragile little affairs are fashioned of sheer net. They strike the keynote of frivolity by being minus fingers. A tiny ruffle finishes off the finger holes and leaves the hands free for lighting cigarettes or lifting a glass without the necessity of removing gloves. A double ruffle at the wrist adds a final touch of charm to this neatest, most daring trick of the season.

Beautifully suited to the sheer frocks of chiffon and net in such high fashion favor for the twilight hour, the new gloves are presented in dark and pastel shades.

Cheese Server for 35 Cents.

In the Berkeley Square pattern comes an attractive cheese server selling at present for 35 cents. After the sale it will return to its original price of $1.50.

Nowadays every hostess appreciates the value of cheese servers. At cocktail "teas" they're indispensable. For informal suppers they're a big convenience. And for "midnight feasts" they're a finishing touch that's both helpful and appropriate.

Mesh Jewelry Is Back.

Mesh jewelry is back again with a bang! This season it comes in more different styles and color combinations than ever before. There are belts, clips, bracelets, brooches, necklaces and pins in a wide variety of styles. They are in red, yellow, green, dusky pink, navy and light blue, all trimmed in gold or silver.

The belts run narrow and medium widths, and the pins and clips come in small and large sizes.

Three cheers for this type of jewelry! It's that type of thing we may wear with sports clothes, afternoon frocks, and formal dresses with perfect assurance that it will be appropriate. And three cheers more—it's modestly priced!

Jaunty Cape Ensembles Are Popular This Season

Pattern No. 913.

THERE will be plenty of cape suits seen about this season. This one, with its one-piece cap-sleeved frock, makes a happy ensemble for warmer spring and cooler summer days. The flat tailored bow at the collarless neck is a different touch. The skirt is slightly circular; the narrow back panel ends with inward turning pleats. The collar band of the straight cape ties jauntily at the throat.

The pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 42, and even an inexperienced seamstress can undertake it with confidence. The yardage requirements are given on the pattern envelope.

Chicken Back on Weekday Menu With Poultry Prices Below Meat

This Potpie Will Make the Family Forget Roast Beef; Dumplings Used Instead of Crust or Biscuit Topping.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE TABLES have turned. Chicken is no longer held up as a one-day a week or Sunday dinner luxury. If you follow the market at all, you will know that the price of meat has been topping that of poultry for many a day or even for weeks. Roast beef days are the ones now that are few and far between.

Fowls are perhaps the best buy when we consider poultry. Don't turn up your nose, because many a fine dish has been brought to light with nothing more than a good stewing chicken—those delectable potpies and fricassees, for example. Let's see what we can do to concoct a potpie that will make the family forget for a time the absence of the ever-popular roast of beef.

This may be a version that you have never tried, for there is no crust or biscuit topping, but dumplings are used instead.

Chicken Potpie.

1 chicken
3 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup milk

Clean, singe and cut up the chicken, place it in a pot and nearly cover with water. Cover the pot and simmer gently. There should be no violent boiling of water for even a minute, for this would serve to toughen the fowl. An old fowl will require at least 3 or 4 hours slow cooking, but a year-old chicken should be done in one and one-half hours. Remove the cover during the last half hour of cooking, to reduce the gravy to about one and one-half pints when done.

Three-fourths of an hour before time to serve make dumplings by the recipe below. When the dumplings are ready to serve, add salt and pepper to the chicken and make the gravy by adding to the liquor in the kettle 3 tablespoons of flour stirred to a paste in one cup of milk. Skim out the chicken, lay it on a platter, place the dumplings on the top and pour over them the gravy.

Dumplings.

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ tablespoon fat
1 teaspoon salt
¾ cup milk

Sift together the dry ingredients (sift the flour once before measuring) and rub in the fat. Add enough milk to moisten the flour, but do not make the mixture too wet. Roll out the dough on a board, making it about 1 inch thick, and cut with a biscuit cutter. Put the pieces on a plate in a steamer and steam 20 to 30 minutes. It is better not to steam the dumplings in a pan over the stewing chicken, as rapid boiling is required. These dumplings may be dropped on top of the stewing chicken, but they will be lighter if steamed.

Now we can turn our attention to spring fryers and broilers. Fryers will be popular all summer so let's consider the broiler and prepare it in a royal manner.

Chicken Leony.

Cut a 2-pound broiler into quarters. Season with salt and pepper and brown in butter. Add one-half teaspoon minced onion, 2 tablespoons cooking sherry and 5 tablespoons blanched spinach. Add 1 cup cream and 1 cup chicken broth or water, cover and cook gently until the chicken is done. If you have no chicken broth, your dish will have more savor if 1 or 2 chicken bouillon cubes are dissolved in the cup of water before adding to the chicken.

Chicken Leony is excellent when served with minced spinach, with hard cooked eggs or better still with the following egg cream sauce.

Egg Cream Sauce.

4 eggs
4 tablespoons grated cheese
4 tablespoons cream or top milk
½ teaspoon salt

Beat eggs, add salt and cream and cook in top of double boiler until thickened, stirring constantly. Add cheese. Toss the spinach in the egg sauce and serve at once.

OBJECT— Not MATRIMONY

By LILLIAN BARKER.

Katrina Harman, on her eighteenth birthday, discovers that, instead of being wealthy, she has lost her fortune. She also discovers that Tazewell Bronson, whom she loves, also loves her, but has no intention of marrying anyone. Ill-advisedly, she allows him to pay for some dresses she has ordered, giving her I. O. U. for them. She determines never to see him again. After discouraging search for a job, she becomes a waitress in the Blue Moon Restaurant. One day she is told to take particular care of a certain luncheon party, but bringing in the first tray, she finds that the guest in question is Tazewell. She drops the tray of hors d'oeuvre on his companion's frock. Fleeing from the wrath of Doremus, the proprietor, she meets him on the stairs and he says Tazewell wants to see her. She refuses and leaves the place.

NOW, at this very moment, after all these weeks of separation, he was in the Blue Moon, probably back downstairs in the restaurant, lunching with his sister and brother-in-law. And Glad was there, too, only she was serving luncheons. But would Gladys really forgive her for walking out of her job? Or rather, of getting herself discharged by defying Doremus's order when work was so scarce and money so low?

Katrina was, within 10 minutes, shut in her room examining the advertising columns.

Examining them and finding nothing that gave her one iota of encouragement.

In despair, Trina, hands clasped behind her, paced the floor. Back and forth. Forth and back. Times uncountable. What was going to befall her now? Was she on the brink of something still more terrible than anything yet experienced?

The appearance at the door of Ann Graham, her landlady, the buxom Ann encountered a few moments before on the second-floor landing, interrupted the pacing and the direful apprehensions.

"Dearie," announced Ann, who "dearied" all roomers not in arrears with their rent, "here's a letter for you! A liveried chauffeur in a Rolls Royce brought it."

"Whose chauffeur?"

"How should I know? The man didn't tell me, but he did say the letter called for an immediate answer and that—if you decided to go—he had orders to drive you uptown as soon as you could get ready. Hurry, though, kid, and read the note. I'm dying to know what's in it."

Trina snatched up a nail file from the dresser and slit open the envelope.

"Well?" interrogated Ann. "Aren't you going to spill the good news? For it must be good coming from somebody who, presumably, owns a 'Rolls.' In your place I'd be so buzzed up, so excited. And you're not saying a word, just keeping me in suspense . . ."

"What are you trying to do, kid? Deliberately torment me?" Ann's eyes were devouringly on the letter which was still in Katrina's hand. "Or are you thinking I should be minding my own business and leaving yours alone; that I'm entirely too 'nosey' and meddlesome? I'll bet that's just what you are thinking."

"You're wrong, all wrong. I was thinking something entirely different," said Katrina. "Nor was I trying to be mysterious or tormenting. In my excitement I just got sort of muddled and failed to . . . to 'shoot straight.' But now, to ease your mind, to clear up the 'mystery,' less than an hour ago I lost my job at the Blue Moon . . ."

"I stopped on the way home and bought two newspapers for the 'help-wanted ads' I hoped would be in them. But not an ad did I find. Not a single one worth answering or investigating. And were my spirits low? I began to wonder if I'd ever land another job.

"Then you brought me this letter with its offer—I believe it amounts to an offer, anyhow—of another position. One infinitely, infinitely better than my place in the restaurant. But," passing over the note, "read this for yourself and tell me if you, too, don't believe a miracle has happened."

Ann took the letter in a pudgy hand upon which flashed three diamond solitaries and a white-gold-and-diamond wedding ring, all on the same finger, and read aloud:

The Ritz Carlton,
New York.

Dear Miss Harman:

You will, I know, be more than surprised to hear from me after my note of some weeks ago, telling you I'd decided to engage a settled, middle-aged companion.

Since writing you, however, I've tried out two such companions, both settled and middle-aged and both highly unsatisfactory. So now, strange as it may seem, I've resolved to give you—and youth—a chance. Provided, of course, you are still unemployed and provided we can come to an understanding on one certain point vitally important to me. One we shall have to discuss, face to face, and perhaps in some detail.

So, in the event you are free, come at once to the Ritz . . . my chauffeur will drive you up . . . and let us see if we can reach an agreement.

Also, bring along enough clothes to last you at least two weeks. I am planning to leave for Atlantic City this afternoon, in the event I engage you, and I shall want you to go along.

Expecting to see you as quickly as possible, I am,

Hopefully yours,
VIOLA FREMYS-DILLON.

June 28, 1933.

P. S.—The salary, as you will recall, is twenty-five dollars a week and expenses. V. F.-D.

"Ye-ah, this does seem like a miracle!" exclaimed Ann, tossing the letter on the table. "Thirty berries per . . . per week and expenses! Who is Viola Fremys-Dillon, though? The name sounds flossy and four-hundredth-ish enough, but I never heard it before. How did you get in touch with such a Ritzy dame, Katrina?"

"Through an ad-for-companion that she put in the paper. I answered the advertisement in person and thought I just about had the job sewed up, too, till I received the note Mrs. Fremys-Dillon refers to in this letter. She was afraid of my youth . . . afraid I'd be frivolous and giddy, I guess. In any case the place went to somebody else . . ."

"To two 'somebody elses,'" reminded the landlady. "And now that they've been 'canned' you're going to get your chance if you and Viola can come to an understanding on that point so vitally important to her. What do you suppose it is, that point, dearie?"

"No idea, but I'm confident I can qualify for the job. My youth was all Mrs. Fremys-Dillon had against me and I . . . I can offset that by acting as if I'm years, years older. Nothing too awfully, awfully kiddish about me, do you think?"

"Nothing but your looks and you should thank your stars you have them. You certainly are dignified and serious, though. Too darned serious if you ask me. Never in all my 30-odd years have I seen an 18-year-old girl, especially one as easy on the eyes as you are, who didn't have scads of boy friends tagging after her.

Colleges to Plant Trees In Honor of Mme. Curie

Representatives of departments of physics and chemistry of 26 Eastern and Midwestern colleges met yesterday at the Hamilton Hotel and planned a Nation-wide tree planting by colleges in honor of Marie Curie, French-Polish scientist who discovered radium.

Resolutions were adopted urging each college to plant a tree on November 7, the sixty-eighth anniversary of her birth. Edward C. Rybicki, president of the Curie Memorial Association, presided.

Death Prelude To Gay Nuptial Of Gen. Goering

Headsman's Ax Falls Twice Shortly Before Pompous Nazi Wedding.

party emerged from the city hall and received a salute from a company of soldiers while a military band played the "Badenweiler March."

They then went to a wedding breakfast, attended by a few close friends, and at 2:15 p. m. Mueller pronounced the religious ceremony at the Berlin Cathedral.

Goering walked past Reichswehr fliers, presenting arms outside the cathedral, while a fife-and-drum corps rolled a salute and brass bands played the traditional Prussian "Present Arms" March.

His bride reached the cathedral immediately afterward by automobile, with Goering's friend, Col. Koerner. She wore a white flowing gown and long veil. Goering and her bridesmaids met her at the door and together then entered the cathedral, where Hitler and other guests already were seated.

Goering answered with a loud, steady "yes" in taking the actress as his bride, while her affirmative wavered, low with emotion.

Gen. Goering, 42, and his bride, about 35, met three years ago at a party at Weimar to which Hitler invited them. His first wife, Baroness Karin von Fock, of Sweden, died in 1932. They had married shortly after the World War.

Institute Starts Class for Adults

First New Course Opens in Epiphany House.

The first of two new classes added this week to the curriculum of the American Institute of Adult Education met last night at the parish house of the Church of the Epiphany, G street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets northwest. It was a course in contemporary world events taught by Dr. Harry E. Woolever, lecturer and writer on international affairs.

A class in Shakespeare and the literature of his time will be open at 8 p. m. Friday, with Dr. Boyd Carpenter, of Georgetown University, in charge. Both these classes will meet weekly.

The institute was founded recently by a group of educational, religious and governmental leaders interested in adult education. Active in the enterprise are Senator Elbert D. Thomas, Dr. ZeBarney Phillips, Prof. Carpenter, Senator John G. Townsend, jr., Prof. Frank W. Collier, Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, Dr. Harry E. Woolever and Harry L. Underwood, attorney.

Talking War May Bring One, Lord Byng Warns on Visit

Hero of Vimy and Cambrai Expressed Admiration for Pershing.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Lady Byng had been explaining to some dozen newspaper men at the Canadian Legation that Lord Byng, first Viscount of Vimy, had just arrived from California "by a wriggly sort of way," and that after four days and nights on the railroad it was better that the promised interview be postponed. "A stern doctor and a stern wife," she said pleasantly, "are necessary to handle him, you know."

The conversation turned to Washington's terrible traffic situation and was getting on well, there before the open fire in the large living room, heavy with the scent of lilies.

A tall man, red of face, straight as a ramrod, walked in unannounced and listened for a moment. His mustache was something like Gen. Pershing's, but his face was kindly and his voice was low and soft. He was dressed in a dark suit. His soft collar was loose around the neck, a gold safety pin clasping a black tie. His hair, grown thin, was iron gray. A heavy gold watch chain stretched across his vest. He was smoking a very small, very short brown pipe. The hero of Vimy Ridge and Cambrai, the one-time Governor General of Canada, the former policeman of Scotland Yard, 72 years old and mellowed, had kept his appointment, after all.

He shook hands with the newshawks and, slowly filling the tiny pipe, stood before the glowing fire, and reminisced for a while with those he had known in Ottawa, some of whom he had also known at Vimy Ridge. One who had been with him in France asked, as the talk veered toward those old days, if he had read Von Hindenburg's book, for in those words of reminiscences by Germany's great fighter is high praise for the first Viscount of Vimy, the old, calm man standing there.

"I have read nothing about the war," he said, still tapping the bowl of his pipe. Then his blue, watery eyes lighted, and he said, "In extenuation neither have I written anything about it."

"We are too near the war to have the proper perspective," he mused, still standing despite the wifely admonitions of Lady Byng. "A whole lot of us did the best we could," he said, and it was noticeable that when this fighter talked about the World War his voice was somewhat tremulous. "It's a shame for someone to say, 'I'd have won the war if——.' One was lucky, that's all."

Would he weaken, some day, and write of his strategy and of the men he fought with, of his pleadings with the high command at Cambrai? No, said the old general, he would never weaken. No, said Lady Byng, he would never weaken. So one British soldier is not going to "tell all." But casually, to those who ask, he will talk about Vimy where he "took the ridge with offensive and held it with defensive." And while he talks you can tell that his days of command are still vivid to him and, perhaps, still a problem in military tactics. "No," he said, "Vimy was not as successful as it should have been."

Somebody, for some reason, asked him about the use of aircraft in the "next war." "You're asking a has-been," he said. And then, the "next war" having been substituted for the World War, he said, "I don't think we are going to have a war right now. I have the idea, though, that the more we talk of war, the more likely we are to have it. When the politicians talk of war, there's war in the offing. Nobody wants war." The voice was soft, and low and trembling. "But we are more likely to have war if we think, and talk, and write war. Things don't look promising at the moment."

Praises Pershing.

Somebody again thought Lord Byng should be seated and there was a touch of reproach in his voice as he refused. Lady Byng, in a brown dress, red blouse and brown hat, sat on the couch awaiting him, the "stern wife." Somebody asked him his impressions of Gen. Pershing. "He made a very great impression upon me," he said. "He visited me at Cambrai and the first thing he asked was to see the wounded. Where does he live? Here in Washington? I haven't seen him since."

Asked what he thought of the present situation in Germany Lord Byng asked to be excused from any comment, recalling again that he was what he called a "has-been." Some one asked him about the Canadians and his answer was sinmple and direct, "They saw me through my troubles," he said.

When some one asked him about his visit—he arrived in California a few days ago—he said, "I'm here for my health. I'm sorry to say." He praised America and its people and firmly insisted that relations between Great Britain and America were better now than they had ever been, better even than during the war. He said that he had "got rather crocked while a policeman." That was when he was the head of Scotland Yard, directing 22,000 policemen who guard the lives and property of 8,000,000 souls in metropolitan London.

Ransom Rumor May Bring U. S. Into Kidnaping

Federal Agents in Chicago Expected to Investigate Child Abduction.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 10.—Possibility that the Federal Government would investigate the disappearance of 4-year-old Richard Perrot, missing for six days, developed tonight when it became apparent the red-haired boy was kidnaped for ransom.

Anxiety over the fate of the child, previously believed to have been enticed away by a moron, eased considerably with announcement that the father, Max, a toolmaker, had received a telephone call informing him the boy, a mute, would be returned tomorrow.

L. J. Kirby, vice president of a manufacturing company for which the elder Perrot works as a shop foreman, announced that "if Max needs any help he can count on me." Police said the inference was that ransom had been asked.

The father was quoted by the Chicago Evening American as saying:

"I know now that I can get my boy back. Only one other person knows about my boy. He warned me not to talk. I expect him back within 24 hours."

Later, however, the father said he did not expect the boy's return before Saturday or Sunday, indicating he had later information.

Police insisted they knew nothing of the boy's abduction or a ransom demand. At the Federal Bureau of Investigation there was the usual "no comment" response, although it was believed the Federal Government would enter the investigation.

Search for the "thin man," supposed abductor of the lad, continued with police, other city employes, legionnaires and even Boy Scouts on the alert for him and the boy. Richard was last seen with a shabbily dressed "thin man" who purchased candy for him.

Roads May Get Federal Funds At Winchester

State Highway Head Says Local Projects Depend on Relief Money.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, April 10.—A letter from H. G. Shirley, commissioner of highways, read last night at a meeting of the city council, indicated one or more projects in this county may be included in a road-building program to be launched in Virginia, provided Federal funds expected as a result of the relief bill are available.

Although no mention of this fund was made by Commissioner Shirley, who was replying to an inquiry from City Manager Arthur M. Field, it was said the highway department is endeavoring to clear up details involving rights for the remainder of Route 11 north of this city, and that it is planned to build the road from Winchester north to the West Virginia line.

Whether this work will be done before other projects in this section depends largely, Shirley said, on whether citizens of Winchester want this route built prior to construction of Route 7 from Winchester to the West Virginia line southwest of Berkeley Springs, W. Va.

Dispatches from Richmond said Shirley expects $10,000,000 to be available for highway construction if Federal plans are approved.

Cuba Arrests 20 In Kidnaper Hunt

ransom was paid in United States $100 bills, serial numbers of which had been recorded. Two other persons were released following investigation, but police still held 20 suspects in custody.

Police also found eight of the $100 ransom bills in a branch of the Nova Scotia Bank, making a total of $1,400 already recovered of the huge ransom sum.

President Carlos Mendieta ordered federal secret service men to cooperate with police in search for the kidnapers. Presidential palace attaches intimated that the oppositionist organization known as "Young Cubans" might be connected with the kidnaping.

Another theory involved a gang headed by Alvin Karpis, American gangster, although police maintained that a group of Cubans were the real abductors. The Karpis theory arose from a police raid on the Hotel Park View in an unsuccessful search for arms. The management attributed the search to "the malicious complaint of a discharged employe."

The manager of the Hotel Park View is Nathan Heller, now at liberty on $1,000 bail from the Florida Federal court, awaiting trial on a charge of harboring Karpis. Heller revealed that Falla had lived in the hotel until recently.

Heller said that Falla during his stay in the hotel almost never left his room. Falla's secretary gave up the room yesterday.

Falla is the son of one of the heirs of Laureano Falla Gutierrez, who died a few years ago, leaving one of the largest estates in Cuba. The heirs recently collected $600,000 as insurance payment for losses incurred in a paper mill fire.

Miami, Fla., April 10 (U.P.).—Reports that Eutimo Falla Bonnett, ransomed for $300,000, came to Miami from Havana after being released by kidnapers were confirmed tonight by Cuban political refugees.

Death Ride Driver Sticks to Story

Official Doubts Statement Girl Killed Self.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, April 10.—Steve Macaluso, 32-year-old employe of the New Orleans Federal Reserve Bank, steadfastly stuck to his original story that his sweetheart, Mrs. Grace Wolfe Gonzales, committed suicide before he stuffed her in the rear compartment of his car. He drove around with the body through New Orleans' streets for two days and nights before turning it over to the police.

Charged with murder and later with embezzlement, when it was learned he had appropriated $10,000 of the funds of the bank where he worked, Macaluso's story was unchanged. He continued to maintain it was fear of scandal and subsequent publicity that made him wait for 72 hours before going to the police with his story.

District Attorney Stanley said today:

"We simply do not believe Macaluso's statement and are continuing our investigation."

They said they did not know his whereabouts now. The immigration office said it had not issued a visa, but explained Falla Bonnet might be an American citizen.

D.C. Opposes Plan to End Railway Line

Abandonment Request Filed at Baltimore by Receiver.

Aid to Commissioners Says District Would Suffer Damage.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 10.—The proposed abandonment of all its services by the Washington Baltimore & Annapolis Electric Railway became a serious reality today when receivers for the company filed formal application with the public service commission.

The proposal had been accepted lightly in some quarters, it was said. A hearing date is to be set by the commission when all interested persons may present evidence.

At approximately the same time as George Weems Williams, receiver for the railroad, presented a notarized application to the commission, a complaint against the move was received from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

R. M. Brennan, secretary of the District Board, said the discontinuance of service "would greatly damage the people of the District of Columbia," and formally protested the move. He asked that the board be given a hearing before permission is granted.

A sanatorium site near Glenn Dale, Md., was selected largely because of the availability of the railroad's service, Brennan said, and $1,000,000 has been spent there. Another $1,500,000 is to be spent, he added. Should the railroad abandon service, an additional annual expense of $3,500 would be assumed by the sanatorium for trucking fuel and supplies alone, the protest stated.

The railroad's application asserted it had suffered a loss of $180,445 in 1934 and a loss of $75,857 the previous year. No interest was paid on bonds or other debts during the period of receivership, it said.

Three bond issues, car trust equipment obligations and debts to unsecured creditors totaling $9,021,295, were [illegible] obligations of the railroad. The latter item was stated to be approximately $700,000.

Reward Increased In Coleman Case

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 10.—Announcement by Gov. Peery of a State award of $200, in addition to the $500 reward previously announced by Spotsylvania County, spurred official and private investigators today in their efforts to solve the murer of Mr. and Mrs. John Thomas Coleman.

A major development today was the discovery in the Coleman well, where the bodies of the elderly farm couple were thrown, of a round piece of shotgun paper believed to be part of the wadding from the shell which injured the two victims, and a shoe from the foot of Mrs. Coleman.

Further excavations will be carried on until the well is emptied. The will left by Mrs. Coleman is to be probated soon at Spotsylvania Courthouse.

Supreme Court To Get Appeal Of Park Laws

Circuit Judge Grants Suit of Land Owners in Shenandoah.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., April 10.—The final step to determine the constitutionality of the Shenandoah National Park proceedings and park legislation led to the door of the Supreme Court yesterday when U. S. Circuit Court Judge William C. Coleman, in Baltimore, granted an appeal of a number of landowners in the park area and ordered the transcript of the record to be sent direct to the highest tribunal within 40 days.

Judge Coleman granted the appeal because the constitutionality of the legislation enacted by the State of Virginia is drawn in question. The appeal was from a decree of a three-judge court in Harrisonburg, sustaining the constitutionality of the park legislation and proceedings. The three judges handing down the decree were Judge Coleman, Judge Parker, Charlotte, N. C., and United States District Judge John Paul, Harrisonburg.

It was stated at the Shenandoah Park offices here today that should the United States Supreme Court reverse the decree of the court in Harrisonburg, the result would be to invalidate all park condemnation proceedings, and put an end to the park project.

Stores Push Legal Battle On Sales Tax

Cumberland Merchants Call Mass Meeting to Map Fight.

County Dealers Invited; Possibility Seen for Assembly Recall.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., April 10.—Retail merchants of Cumberland and the surrounding county are invited to a meeting called by the Associated Retailers of this city to plan concerted action against the gross sales tax enacted by the Maryland General Assembly last week. The meeting will be held Friday at 8 p. m. in the city hall.

While Friday will be the last day set aside by Gov. Nice for hearings for and against legislation before he signs or vetoes the various measures, the meeting here will deal mainly with arranging to make a test case of the constitutionality of the tax, it is indicated. At last Wednesday's meeting the Associated Retailers agreed to first confer with similar groups in Baltimore and other sections of the State and to join in a concerted fight against the sales tax. Ben M. Kamens, president of the local Retailers Association; Walter A. Johnson, secretary, and secretary also of the Cumberland Chamber of Commerce, spent considerable time in Annapolis lobbying against the bill and explained to the city merchants their efforts and the workings of various groups in opposition to the measure. The Baltimore Association of Commerce will in all probability foster the fight against the measure.

Mr. Kamens told of the possibility of the Legislature being called back into session by the Governor. While the Governor approves the sales tax measure since he is bound by promise to have the State to raise $5,000,000 for relief, there is the chance that vigorous protest by merchants throughout the State will cause him to recall the assembly that a more favorable tax may be enacted. The merchants claim that they have been singled out to individually raise the relief fund and believe that the burden should be more equally divided either among all the consumers within the State or by all groups of industrial and commercial establishments.

Two Jailed on Charge Of Stealing Calves

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodstock, Va., April 10.—James Whittington and Carson Jenkins, both of Strasburg, are in Shenandoah County Jail, because of a fondness for veal. They were allegedly found on the farm of Walter Stickley, skinning a 200 pound calf. When Stickley approached the men fled, but not before the owner said he had recognized Whittington, whom he had known for years. The description of Jenkins and blood stains on his clothes led to his arrest. Both men denied the crime.

Deputy Sheriff John Sheetz, investigating the disappearance of other calves in that section, found the hind quarters and hide of a calf in Whittington's cellar today and later this veal was said to have been identified as belonging to Alfred Dever, of near Strasburg. An additional charge has been added against Whittington for theft of the Dever calf.

Joint Concert by Glee Clubs To Feature Jefferson Services

Sweet Briar and University of Virginia Choral Groups of 125 Voices Will Sing at Founder's Day Exercises at Charlottesville Saturday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., April 10.—The combined glee clubs of Sweet Briar College and the University of Virginia will join in a special concert here Saturday night as part of the Founder's Day exercises in honor of the 192d anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson.

The choral groups of the two schools—125 male and female voices—will sing separately and also will join in presentation of songs in a program to be directed jointly by Prof. Harry Rogers Pratt, of the University of Virginia, and Prof. Alfred Finch, of Sweet Briar.

Miss Louise Rood, a fellow of Juillard Foundation, who is teaching at Sweet Briar, will play several violin solos, and quartets and soloists will sing old and new compositions.

It is planned that the concert will inaugurate a musical festival of all State college choral organizations to be given here annually on Founder's Day.

Jefferson was the first to propose that musical theory and composition be taught in American universities by planning to include a department of music when he obtained the charter for the University of Virginia in 1819. At that time he advertised in Baltimore and Philadelphia newspapers for "a gentleman proficient on two instruments who can also teach musical composition."

The concert will be given before an audience of students and faculty members of both schools and visitors here for memorial services to be conducted at the university and at Jefferson's tomb at Monticello. Among those expected to attend are President and Mrs. John Lloyd Newcomb, of the University of Virginia; President Meta Glass, of Sweet Briar College; Bainbridge Colby, Founder's Day speaker; Stuart G. Gibbony, president of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation, and others.

Both glee clubs have given a series of successful concerts this year. Miss Elizabeth Johnston, of New York, is president of the Sweet Briar musical organization, and the University of Virginia singers are presided over by Guy Hope, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Westminster, Md., April 10.—C. Ray Barnes, member of the Maryland House of Delegates from Carroll County, and his wife were seriously injured early this morning when their car was struck head-on by a machine operated by Frank T. Brothers, of Sykesville, State police reported.

The accident occurred near Eldersburg, Carroll County, shortly after midnight, as Mr. and Mrs. Barnes were returning to their home at Winfield from Baltimore. The condition of Mr. and Mrs. Barnes was said to be undetermined.

Brothers was arrested by State Policeman Q. R. Buckworth and held at the Pikesville, Baltimore County, police station. A charge of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor was lodged against him early today.

Conrad Smith, of Sykesville, who was riding with Brothers when the accident occurred, was also admitted to West Baltimore General Hospital, suffering from head injuries and a broken jaw. Smith was treated by Dr. W. I. Lawson, of Eldersburg, while Dr. William Martin, of Harrisonville, administered first aid to Mr. and Mrs. Barnes before they were removed to the hospital in the car of Fred Bannister, of Baltimore.

Bank Suing 95 on Stock At Frederick

Receivers Ask Subpenas for Them in Suit on Assessments.

Coblentz Account Shows He Has Paid $12,435 of $63,780.

By the Associated Press.

Frederick, Md., April 10.—Receivers of the defunct Central Trust Co. today filed a second suit against stockholders who have not paid stock assessments, and asked that the circuit court issue subpenas for 95 defendants in the action.

The suit is the second filed on behalf of the receiver for collection of the assessments. The company's capital stock was listed at $1,500,000 when the bank closed September 3, 1931, and since that time, according to estimates, one-third to one-half of the stockholders have paid liabilities.

The first action to enforce stock collections was begun in circuit court here June 20, 1933, and made 73 holders of larger blocks of stock defendants. Eight of them have been listed as "paid and satisfied," and credits for partial payments have been entered in other cases.

Other holders of smaller amounts of stock not listed in the original action have made full or part payments and the receiver reported to the court in February that he had collected more than $100,000 up to that time.

The 95 persons made defendants in the suit filed today were listed alphabetically from "A" through "E" and were shown to be indebted in amounts varying from $10 to $3,500. John S. Newman, counsel for the receiver, explained the alphabetical listing by saying "we had to begin somewhere and stop somewhere. The entire list was too long to include all persons as defendants, so we simply went to certain points."

Other defendants may be included later, Newman said.

The payment of $145,000 by the receiver to the Peloples Liquidating Corporation largely made possible a dividend of 2 per cent which was made recently. A previous dividend of 8 per cent had been paid.

The account of Emory L. Coblentz, president of the defunct institution, shows that he has paid, through sale of his home and personal property, $12,435.50 of the $63,780 assessed against him.

Hospital Board Votes for Unit On State Farm

New $175,000 Addition to Virginia Asylum Is Authorized.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, April 10.—A resolution recommending that Eastern State Hospital Board be empowered to construct immediately a new $175,000 unit on the Dunbar farm, 2 miles outside of Williamsburg, and that it accept $25,000 offered by the Rockefeller interests for thus clearing the way for erection of a $750,000 hotel in the city was adopted unanimously this afternoon by the General Hospital Board of Virginia.

The resolution was forwarded immediately to the office of Gov. Peery. The Governor was in Washington at the time for a conference on the Skyline Drive, but belief was indicated in informed quarters that he would look with favor on the proposal.

Reports have been current for more than a week of eventual removal of the Eastern State Hospital from its present location in Williamsburg to the farm property it owns, and that the Williamsburg restoration, in which John D. Rockefeller, jr., was the prime mover, would contribute $25,000 for the undertaking.

Removal Rumor Spiked.

A few days later, published reports said removal of the entire Eastern State Hospital to Staunton was under consideration, but board members were quick to point out this afternoon that adoption of today's resolution definitely spiked that rumor. Board members of other hospitals said the board of the Western State Hospital at Staunton had never encouraged the latter report.

In order to expedite building of the new unit, the resolution urged that the Eastern board be authorized to borrow immediately up to $150,000 for the project.

Once the Governor authorizes the undertaking, the board of the Williamsburg Hospital will have charge of construction details. It was necessary for the general board to initiate the project, however.

The resolution was presented by Ashton Dovell, of Williamsburg, floor leader of the House of Delegates, who had been designated by Attorney General Staples to supervise legal phases of the proposed change.

George P. Coleman, of Williamsburg, member of the Eastern Hospital board, spoke on the resolution and urged its adoption.

Room for 200 Patients.

New quarters are urgently needed, the resolution points out, as State engineers some time ago condemned buildings that now accommodate 165 patients. It was this emergency that first caused consideration of the proposed move at the general board meeting on February 12.

L. Ferguson, of Appomattox, and Mrs. Charles C. Brown, of Rural Retreat, Present at their first meeting were two new members, Dr. Frank Pratt, of Fredericksburg, appointed to succeed Dr. J. K. Hall, of Richmond, on the board of the Central Hospital at Petersburg, and Dr. O. T. Amory, of Newport News, appointed to succeed Mrs. T. S. D. Covington, of Lillian, on the Eastern Hospital board.

Five Million Relief Asked Of Dominion

Hopkins Asks Virginia to Raise Funds for Next Fiscal Year.

Peery in Washington; Byrd Keeps Silent on Question.

By the Associated Press.

The Relief Administration asked Virginia and its local sub-divisions yesterday to put up $5,000,000 for relief purposes during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

FERA has been giving Virginia approximately $800,000 a month during the current year. Virginia has had no direct relief appropriation, but State officials have insisted the State's road building program was largely a relief measure.

The $5,000,000 asked is a direct relief appropriation which the Federal Administration compared in its announcement with $947,000 provided by Virginia localities during the present year.

Not Picked for Rise.

Virginia was not singled out for an increase. Virtually every State was asked for more than was given this year, with Texas, Maine and Delaware the only exceptions. Among States nearby Virginia, North Carolina was asked for $3,000,000, compared with $189,000; South Carolina for $2,600,000 compared with $390,000; Maryland $6,000,000, compared with $5,130,000; West Virginia, $3,300,000, compared with $2,492,000, and Tennessee $2,800,000, compared with $584,000.

Although the announcement of Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, said the increases were the result of "individual agreements worked out between the FERA and the States," observers wondered whether the request would not revive the old controversy between Virginia and FERA over the contribution of the State toward relief of destitution.

Such a controversy was simmering some months ago when Hopkins, after a conference with Gov. Peery, announced there had been "a meeting of the minds" and that Federal allotments to Virginia would be continued.

Arrangements Pending.

No special note was taken of Virginia in Hopkins' announcement today except that it had not yet appropriated the $5,000,000 asked and that its Legislature does not meet this year. In speaking of Virginia and several other States in the same category, the announcement said:

"Arrangements are pending, with the expectation that they will be completed soon."

Discussing the general situation, Hopkins said:

"The amounts have been arrived at by careful and full consideration of facts on the needs of each State and its ability to provide for its needy citizens. The amounts represent a meetinf of State and Federal minds on the relief and financial situation of each State. The amounts to be contributed by counties, cities and towns are carefully estimated, based on ability to provide."

Gov. Peery was in Washington today, but did not see Hopkins. Senator Byrd had no comment to make on the request.

Plans were made in Washington yesterday by Gov. Peery and Representative Burch of Martinsville for a later conference on obtaining a share for Virginia of the $100,000,000 rural electrification fund created by the $4,880,000,000 work relief act. The conference will be held soon after an administrator of the electrification fund is named by President Roosevelt.

With "Rain From Heaven" Still to Come, New Subscription Season Is Planned

Theater Guild Promises Trio Of New Works

3 Will Be Found Outside; Granoff Leaves Earle; Amusement Notes.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

With the present subscription season of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society of Washington yet to be completed by the presentation in the National Theater the week of Easter Monday, April 22, of S. N. Behrman's "Rain From Heaven," starring Jane Cowl, with John Halliday in the principal male role, it is interesting to note that plans already are under way for the formulation of the subscription season of 1935-36.

From that ardent advocate of the Theater Guild's artistic enterprises, Mr. Russel Crouse, comes the announcement that during the current week important conclaves have been held in the office of the guild, in New York, with a view to perfecting plans for the next season of the so-called legitimate drama. These conferences have been attended by representatives of the mother theater from Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and the National Capital.

Those in attendance were Miss Theda Cocroft, of Chicago, Miss Rebekeh Hobbs, of Boston; Mrs. Upton Favourite, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Sidney Thomas, of Washington.

Guild to Supply Three.

The Theater Guild will, as usual, says Mr. Crouse, furnish three of the Capital's subscription season of six plays of the better sort. The American Theater Society of Washington will round out the subscription season by booking three additional attractions from among the most desirable offerings available.

Arrangements are pending with the managements of some of this season's most important successes to insure their presentation, on a subscription basis, in the key cities named next year. It is understood that definite announcement of the successful culmination of these plans will be made from the offices of the guild, in New York, and Mrs. Thomas, in the National Theater here, within a short time.

In the meantime, it is pleasant to contemplate the distinguished qualities that are said to characterize "Rain From Heaven," last of the current subscription plays to be seen in the National in a fortnight. Its stellar luminary and her leading man—as well as Author Behrman's proficiency as a penetrating and pungent playwright—are, of course, known quantities.

Added impetus is given one's impatience to view this popular theatrical exhibit, however, by the fact that Lee Simonson designed and executed the settings.

An Artist From Outset.

Mr. Simonson, you should know by now, made up his mind at the age of 10 that he would be an artist. Deeming such minor matters as college matriculations and graduations merely as interruptions of his primary protest, he finished New York's Ethical Culture School in practically nothing, flat, and then went on to Harvard to complete his four-year course in three years, emerging Magna Cum Laude, with a Phi Betta Kappa key dangling from his watch chain—assuming that the young man had a watch and chain.

Then came study in Paris, a wide experience in pigments and a final determination to do something notable in the theater in the way of investiture.

Along with Theresa Helburn, Helen Westley, Philip Moeller, Lawrence Langner and the several others, Mr. Simonson now is one of the executive directors of the Theater Guild who alternates his divergent talents between scene designing and executive direction of important productions as one of the two comprising each of the "producing committees" intrusted, in rotation, with the staging of the Guild's productions.

All in all, "Rain From Heaven" should be quite a piece, well worth waiting the National's two dark weeks to enjoy. Heaven forbid that it should be canceled!

Members of the Metropolitan Police Department will view "Car 99," an exciting story of the Michigan State Police, at a special preview screening in the Ambassador Theater, Eighteenth street and Columbia road, this afternoon at 4:15 o'clock. The "John Laws" will be the guests of General Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner Brothers interests in the Washington territory. The film, based on the popular magazine stories of the fascinating operation of Michigan's crime detection agencies, is a Paramount production, opening as chief screen feature at the Earle Theater on Friday, with Fred McMurray featured.

Granoff to Study Voice.

Bert Granoff, the popular tenor who is just completing a year of featured appearances as soloist with the Earle Theater's orchestra, under the conductorship of C. Frederick Clark—"Freddie" to you—is an ambitious young man.

At the conclusion of his present anniversary week, Mr. Magranoff—to employ the sum total of the hereditary monicker—will terminate his present engagement at the Earle and proceed to St. Louis for a visit with his family.

Thence he will journey to New York for three months of intensive voice culture, to make the most of a talent that has made him a prime favorite with music lovers of the Capital during the past twelve months. At the end of that period he will return to Washington and appear again as featured soloist with the Clark instrumental ensemble—if that is what it is.

We have before us a cordial note from Bert, which, under date of April 8, reads in part as follows: "On the first anniversary of my engagement at the Earle Theater, please permit me to thank you for your kindness to me during that year. I feel that my remaining at the Earle as long as I have, has been directly due to the numerous considerations expressed by you in your columns. Sincerely yours, (Signed) BERT GRANOFF. (P. S. And I still think it was raining violets!)"

That postscript, needless to say, refers to the recent occasion when Bert elicited a huge laugh from a drenched capacity house by singing "April Showers" while it was pouring pitchforks and hammer handles on the outside—as it has been most of the time of late.

Good luck, fellow, and happy landings when you get back.

Repeating the successful experiment tried something over a year ago, Loew's Palace Theater on Monday morning, April 22—Easter Monday—will present an all-Walt Disney program at a flat admission charge of 25 cents, for all ages and genders and any seat in the house.

With more than 1,000 preferences already expressed to the management by letter, telgram and phone call, Division Manager Carter Barron and House Manager Col. Orangelo Ratto have decided upon these subjects as the ones which will make up the special program: "The Wayward Canary," "A Gala Premiere," "The Pet Store," "The Flowers and the Trees," "Babes in the Woods," "Birds in the Spring" and "Father Noah's Ark."

These represent a fair mixture of Mickey Mouse cartoon comedies and the incomparable Silly Symphonies.

Mr. Gaige's Plans.

If one of Crosby Gaige's present pet plans for next season eventuates with the success usually attending his activities in the playhouse, Philip Merivale, last seen here in the stellar role of Maxwell Anderson's "Valley Forge," and before that as leading man with Helen Hayes in "Mary of Scotland," and Gladys Cooper will appear for him in two of Master Will Shakespeare's notable works—"Macbeth" and "Othello."

There is just a bare chance that this last may collide with Walter Huston's ambition to play the same piece in the East.

Assuming that there will be no slip twixt Mr. Gaige's cup and his lip, a ten weeks' tour will begin in the fall, opening in Boston on October 7 and including a majority of the principal cities in the East and Middle West. The company will return to New York to open on Broadway on Monday, December 23, for a limited engagement, obviously contrived to catch its fair percentage of Broadway's Yuletide show-shopping trade.

Also a New Play.

Following the Shakespearean productions, the costars will appear in a new play, the identity of which is yet to be revealed and probably at the moment is as vague to Mr. Gaige as it is to the rest of us.

Mr. Merivale, by the by, has had a wealth of experience in playing Shakespeare in England, where for several seasons he was importantly cast in support of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree.

Miss Cooper, who is one of England's best-known actresses, made a remarkable success in her first appearance in this country in "The Shining Hour."

They appeared together, if memory serve correctly—as it often does not—in a scene from "Cynara" at Daniel Frohman's last local Actors' Fund Benefit, held in the National Theater on a memorable Sabbath evening last season.

For the last play of its season, the Drama Guild of Washington has chosen "Crime at Blossoms," by Mordaunt Shairp, perhaps most readily recalled as author of "The Green Bay Tree," presented with success both in England and this country. The cast for "Crime at Blossoms" includes Isabel C. White, Clarence W. Moore, Betty Owens, Thomas Matthew Cahill, Rowland White, jr., Mrs. Adkins Briggs, Crystal Key, Mrs. W. S. Hepner, Howard Wentworth, Benton Brooke, Frances Koonce, Gladys Keer, Mrs. Ray Zigler, Roy Bateman, Harold Allen, Frederick V. Rand, Murray Bernhardt, Mary G. Minnix, W. S. Hepner, Edwin H. Etz and Belle Shapiro. The play is being directed by Denis Connell, with settings by Paul Bradbury Walter. It will be presented in the Wardman Park Theater on Monday and Tuesday, April 29 and 30.

Time's Metamorphoses.

Funny the way things work out. Frigsample, he was Eddie, the property boy, at a total gross wage of nine frogskins per week. She was the leading woman—the first to be signed under contract by the newly formed Lasky Corporation, forerunner of the present Paramount Company, known to the trade, more or less, as the Famous Players-Lasky Co.

She was starred in such fillums in "The Warrens of Virginia"—an item in which Mary Pickford, possibly still known, then, as Gladys Smith, once appeared on the living stage—"The Man From Home" and "The Girl of the Golden West," done years later by Ann Harding in a splendid bit of miscasting, all produced and directed by Cecil B. De Mille, at present engaged on a major opus dealing with and called "The Crusades."

That was something over 20 years ago—not much over, but something.

Today, Mabel Van Buren is an "extra" in "Mississippi," currently occupying the screen at Loew's Fox, with Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Queenie Smith and others of contemporary note in the cast.

Edward Sutherland directed the picture. He was Eddie, the prop boy, 'way back yonder. That is the way it is in picture.

As I remarked somewhere up there near that first line, funny the way things work out. It still is, and probably always will be!

Mitzi Mayfair, Jack Powell and a few more that might be named are not the only ones who take cognizance of the public prints.

It is pleasant to receive a brief note, dated April 8, from Ray Henderson, director of public contacts, to get a little flossy about it, for Katharine Cornell, whose first performance in America in John van Druten's "Fowers of the Forest," we considered at some length in the Sunday drama section of The Post, reading in part this wise: "Miss Cornell, Mr. McClintic and all of us are delighted by your comments. I feel very much as you do about the play. Tonight we meet the Broadway test. I look forward to seeing you next season.

"Yours sincerely,

(Signed) "RAY HENDERSON."

Anyone in his right mind would look forward with pleasure to meeting Mr. Henderson any time—one of the brilliantly outstanding credits to his profession; an erudite, literate and scholarly gentleman who knows what the theater is all about, and why.

Still-for-Sale Note.

That 15 minutes over the air through WJSV today at 1:30 still can be bought for practically nothing—just an airplane trip to Miami Beach, Palm Beach, Bermuda, the Virgin, so to speak, Islands, or anywhere along the northern coast of South America.

I might even consider Hains Point.

Danced Way to Fame in Films

Rita Cansino, pictured above with her dancing partner, whose screen potentialities were "discovered" by film scouts at Agua Caliente, where she danced in a night club, has been signed to a seven-year contract by Fox as a reward for her excellent work in the forthcoming "Dante's Inferno." Senorita Cansino, who has just passed her seventeenth birthday, is one of the famous Spanish dancing family of Cansinos. As has been pointed out here before, she has numerous family connections in Washington, centering in the house of Hayworth.

Postlude - By Ray C. B. Brown

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

Fourth concert of 1935 chamber of music festival at the Library of Congress, Tuesday morning. The Gordon String Quartet (Jacques Gordon, David Sackson, Paul Robyn and Naoum Benditzki) and Frank Sheridan, pianist. Program: Quartet No. 3 (Quincy Porter), Quartet No. 2 (Werner Janssen), Quintet for piano and strings (John Alden Carpenter).

Of the three works by American composeds presented on this occasion, the most significant in both achievement and promise was Werner Janssen's second quartet, written in 1933, and played for the first time in public. The individuality, vitality and freshness of this music presage for Mr. Janssen a creative development paralleling his advancement as a conductor. He has original ideas and expresses them with verve in a manner quite his own. The only discernible influence upon his style is that of Sibelius and one may have at a first hearing mistaken for an influence what is actually a Norse essence.

On the basis of intuition, one would surmise that the first two movements of the quartet are expressions of personality and the last two movements consciously American in content and treatment. The incisive force and nervous vigor of the "Agitato ed energico," and the veiled humor and honest sentiment in the "Comodamento presto-Andante sostenuto" seem to be attributes of the composer. At least, one is aware in these sections of a more direct contact with the inspirational impulse.

The melodic line and the harmonic basis of the slow movement, "Largamente sostenuto," are strongly suggestive of the Negro spiritual. The resemblance does not amount anywhere to imitation or pastiche, yet the accents, the mode and the rhythm are adumbrations of that lyrical type. It is not the transcript of a racial song, but an etherealization of an idiom. This movement alone is sufficient to make the quartet appealing to that as yet unidentified being, the average auditor.

In the last movement, a lively and jocular "Ritmico," Mr. Janssen has utilized to admirable effect the spirit, but not the monotonous and maddening ictus, of jazz. On this attainment one compliments him, for it is no small feat to capture the intangible. The material elements of jazz are only too patent, but their comment electrons are elusive.

Quincy Porter's third quarter, dated 1930, is a sturdy and competent work, independent of schools and unallied with any exoticism. Soundly constructed and contemporaneous in its harmonic freedom, it appears to be abstract in aim and devoid of a program. A poetic vein runs through its three movements, but fantasy is kept in rather tight curb, as though sincerity were dominant over imagination. The music is enjoyable for its frankness and its avoidance of any pretense.

Again calling upon intuition's aid, one would say that Mr. Porter's purpose is to write indigenous music, representative of an inspiration native to America. This quartet of his is American in its vigor, directness and purposive attitude; it is animated by what one may call practical poesy.

John Alden Carpenter, in his piano quintet of 1934, continues his course as a serious and concentrated composer, following the lonely path from which he has occasionally strolled for such diversions as "Skyscrapers." If this quintet has any affinity, it with Brahms, although Johannes would never have used the piano for percussive effects of Stravinskian harshness.

The excellent interpreters of the program deserved the warm commendation they received from the audience. The Gordon String Quartet is not only efficient in technique, but also closely knit in sympathetic rapport and the tone of the ensemble is finely blended and firm.

Final concert of the chamber music festival at the Library of Congress, Tuesday night. A program of music by Igor Stravinski, presented by the composer, assisted by Samuel Dushkin, violinist; Olga Averino, soprano; Frank Sheridan, pianist; Simon Bellison, clarinetist, and the Gordon String Quartet.

Igor Stravinski's appearance in a program of his own music attracted to this concert an audience which overflowed into the lobby. Curiosity found various satisfactions in the miscellany of compositions which ranged, in order of time, from 1907 to 1934, and showed the facets of Stravinski's talent in miniature. It can not be said, however, that the disclosures enhanced the glory of the composer, whose singular quality of genius is inseparable from the orchestra.

The direction in which he might have moved was clearly indicated in the early songs, "The Cloister" and "A Song of the Dew." In them, lyrical beauty raised its head and could have emerged in more perfect loveliness. Traces of that lyricism still appeared in the settings of two poems by Balmont, dating from 1911, but in the three little songs from "Recollections of My Childhood" (1913) and "Tilimbom" (1917) the heavy hand of dissonance had already laid its weight on melodic impulse.

One stage work was represented in the suite for violin, piano and clarinet from "L'Histoire du Soldat," and the reduction entailed the loss of its essential instrumental coloring. This disadvantage did not affect the "Concertino" and the "Three Pieces" for string quartet, which were capably handled by Jacques Gordon and his colleagues.

The primary novelty was the "Divertimento," a suite for piano and violin composed last year, and subtitled: "Inspired by the Muse of Chaikovski." To the auditor the inspiration seemed to have taken the form of melodic imitation and of quotations from Chaikovski. Much use was made, for instance, of the opening phrase from the "Humoresque" in G, although the slight theme was subjected only to repetition and not to development.

One found more interesting ideas in the other piano and violin suite, "Duo Concertant," written in 1932. In the two "Ecologues," the "Gigue" and the "Dithyrambe" were contained some intriguing passages of poetic value.

Kiwanians Clear $2,500 on Bazaar

Charlottesville Club to Use Funds for Cripples.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., April 10.—Announcement was made at the weekly luncheon of the local Kiwanis Club by Armonde Paxson that a net profit of more than $2,500 had been made on the four-day bazaar held by the organization in the city armory lats week-end.

This sum will go into the club's fund for crippled and underprivileged children, one of the main projects of the club since its organization 13 years ago. The organization maintains a bed in one of the wards at the Blue Ridge Sanatorium, the State's newest tubercular intsitution, located near Monticello, home of Jefferson, and for years has provided a car for the district nurse at the University of Virginia Hospital.

In previous years the money for this charity was realized from minstrel shows. The maximum amount raised in any one year was around $500.

Gross receipts for the bazaar totaled over $4,000.

Present at the weekly luncheon were delegations from the Harrisonburg and Clifton Forge clubs. Heading the delegation from the latter city was State Senator E. A. Sneed.

The guest speaker was Harry E. Karr, Baltimore lawyer and past president of Kiwanis International.

Hollywood By Sidney Skolsky

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, April 9th.

AT FOX they have started to film "The Farmer Takes a Wife," and have constructed, out in the open, a huge basin of water representing the Erie Canal and a typical boat of that period. It is a practical boat and can be put into motion to float up and down the studio canal. Janet Gaynor, the star, and Henry Ponda, star to be, are standing and talking to Director Victor Fleming; they are the center of the attention. Sitting unnoticed on this tow, waiting to stroll across the scene as part of the atmosphere, is an extra, Daisy Robinson; she is one of the mob. No one pays any attention to her. Later, she will stand in the pay-off line, collect $15 and be on her way.

Daisy Robinson—the name seemingly means nothing, and yet it is connected with one of the grandest names in theatrical history. This extra owns the dramatic rights to one of the most successful plays which ever toured the United States. She owns the rights to the Joseph Jefferson version of "Rip Van Winkle."

• • • •

Daisy Robinson is the widow of the son of Joseph Jefferson. He willed his son, of the same name, the rights to his noted vehicle, and in turn the son left the rights to his wife. It was the trouper, Jefferson, who purchased the piece of land in Gramercy Park and founded The Players; it was the same Jefferson who named The Little Church Around the Corner . . . But now, Director Fleming has shouted: "Camera." Miss Gaynor and Mr. Fonda hold the spotlight. The mob of extras start walking in the background. A Mrs. Joseph Jefferson walks unnoticed and somehow I don't see the canal or the barge or Gaynor or Fonda—but all I see is the Players' Club, "Rip Van Winkle" and $15 for the day's work.

GRACE MOORE is singing a hotsy totsy song for a night club sequence in "Love Me Forever." It is a rehearsal scene for the floor show of the Silver Slipper Club, and Maxine Lewis is supposed to be teaching Miss Moore how to get hot and go to town. This is Maxine Lewis' first job in a feature flicker, and it is somewhat of a coincidence, for Miss Lewis was a torch singer at the old Silver Slipper on Broadway. Grace Moore sings "Whoa, You're Stepping High," and later, when she looks at the rushes in the projection room, she admits that she surprised herself. "I honestly couldn't believe that the person on the screen was I," says Miss Moore. "I never gave myself such a good time." After finishing this number, Miss Moore rushes to her cheaply furnished dressing room at the club. Leo Carrillo, the proprietor, enters the dressing room to tell Miss Moore that she will never have to work again. "I will work for you," he says. It is the first love scene.

• • • •

When the scenario of "Love Me Forever" was first prepared, before it was known that Leo Carrillo would be in it, the night club owner was named Corelli. Now, Grace Moore plays the scene, and because the names are so alike, she persists in calling Corelli—Carrillo, and the scene has to be retaken . . . Miss Moore is fond of perfumes and wears a different perfume for different types of sequences. For the hot cha number she went out and purchased the strongest dime perfume she could find at the 5 and 10 cent store.

ROBERT BENCHLEY, the actor, is working in "China Seas." And when he is Benchley, the actor, he is completely divorced from Benchley, the writer. He was getting ready to play a scene when one of the writers of the scenario rushed onto the set and said to him: "Bob, I need a couple of funny lines for a funny scene I'm writing for you. Can you give them to me?" It was then that Benchley told of his dual personality; that when he is paid to act he can't write and vice versa and other vices. However, the scenarist explained everything would be all right, for Benchley likes to ad lib, and, therefore, he's certain there will be funny lines in the speeches he prepares. Benchley is playing the role of an author, and whenever he is seen he has a glass filled with a highball in his hand. For the first five minutes, Benchley used a prop. But the minute he tasted the drink he demanded the genuine stuff. He is an actor of the realist school. Bob Benchley looks just as he did at Tony's.

Ketti Gallian is sitting on a horse, which seems rather pleased, playing a big outdoor scene for "Under the Pampas Moon." Warner Baxter, a gaucho, is to come up and pat the horse and Miss Gallian. Director James Tinling claims that the horse and Miss Gallian are not in the correct focus of the camera and the big, heavy arc lights. At first, he wants Ketti to ride the horse into position, but Miss Gallian explains that she is merely a horse sitter, not a rider. Then Director Tinling remembers the difficulty he had hoisting Miss Gallian onto the horse. He decides not to move the horse. Instead, he will move the camera and the fleet of arc lights, several of which are stationed in the trees . . . Gallian rides again.

Nats' Ragged Play in Home Debut Helps Dodgers to 7-4 Victory

Coppola Wild In Opening Inning

Yields 3 Runs on 2 Hits, 4 Walks, but Steadies Thereafter.

Weaver's Loafing Costs Run; Nats Equal 10 Hits of Dodgers.

By Shirley Povich.

MANAGER BUCKY HARRIS unveiled his 1935 Washington Ball Club for public approval yesterday at Griffith Stadium, but the Nats were handed an unceremonious defeat by the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Four hundred hardy fans, huddled in knots through the stands and risking the ravages of pneumonia on a cold, gray day, suited only to duck hunting, saw the Nats toss away the game, 7 to 4, to the Dodgers in the late stages.

Known as the Daffiness boys of the big leagues as a result of their consistent "bonehead" plays, the Dodgers yesterday yielded their dubious distinction to the Nats, who succeeded in refraining from tying the score by dint of great effort.

It was in the sixth inning, with the Nats trailing by one run, two on base and Jake Powell at bat, that the ball game went daffy. Powell lifted a tremendous fly to left center field and Monte Weaver, on third base, trotted home after the catch.

But that was the difficulty. He only trotted. Buddy Myer, on first base, meanwhile was attempting to take second after the catch, and he was put out before Weaver arrived at the plate for a double play that nullified the tying run.

Coppola Pleases Harris.

Despite the three runs he allowed, the Dodgers in the first inning, young Henry Coppola did little to disturb Manager Harris' convictions that he is a potential regular on the Nats' staff.

The first man at bat, Frenchy Bordagaray, greeted the rookie Coppola with a double to right field, and Coppola then struck out Frey. But Umpire Majerkurth, setting a new free-style record for astigmatism, called the pitch a ball, despite the fact that Frey had swung and the decision unsettled Coppola to the extent that he walked Frye and Koenecke, and finally forced in one of Brooklyn's three runs of the inning.

Four bases on balls off Coppola figured in the Dodgers' opening three runs and the young pitcher received a second poor break when Leslie's Texas League single fell among the seaweed in left field through which Jake Powell vainly tried to make his way.

Coppola redeemed himself in the remaining three innings he pitched, allowing only one more hit.

The Nats, whose ten hits off three Brooklyn pitchers—Emil Leonard, Joe Munns and Van Mungo—equaled the Dodgers' total, reduced Brooklyn's lead to 3-2 in the fourth inning when Stone, Kuhel and Bolton singled and Lary rapped a double to center field.

When Monte Weaver took up the hurling duties for the Nats in the fifth, the Dodgers didn't tarry with him. They knocked Weaver loose from two runs immediately on singles by Leslie, Cuccinello and Stripp and boosted their lead to 5-2.

Munns Yields Runs.

The Nats got a pair of runs back against Munns in the sixth, when Bolton led off with a double to center, which was followed by three straight walks, forcing one run over. It was in this inning that

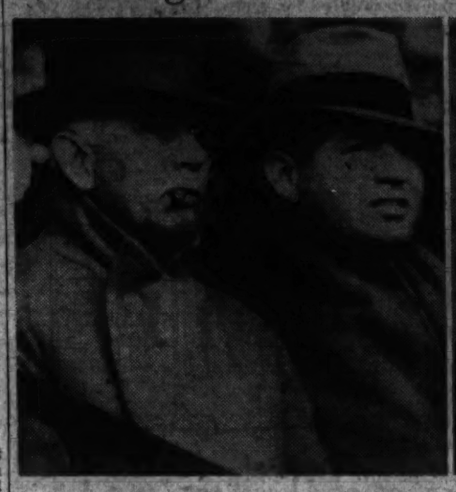
Among Those Present at Griffith Stadium as Lary Raps Out Two-Base Hit Against Dodgers



Art Shires (right), former bad boy of the big leagues, is the guest of Clark Griffith. Shires is now manager of the Harrisburg, Pa., club, one of the Nats' farms.

Lyn Lary makes an impressive debut here in a Washington uniform. The Nats' shortstop raps out a double to center field in the fourth inning to score Joe Kuhel from second base with the Nats' second run of the game against Brooklyn. Behind the bat are Catcher Babe Phelps and Umpire Majerkurth. In his first trip to the plate, Lary lined a single to right field.

Post Staff Photos.

Joe Cronin, pictured as a spectator in the park where he starred. The former manager of the Nats left his Boston team in Richmond for a one-day visit here.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

THE man who married the boss' daughter and a month later found himself wedded to the Boston Red Sox on a five-year contract that called for a salary of $30,000 per annum, came back to Washington to visit the home folks yesterday.

Ball-player-like, Joe Cronin spent his self-given furlough from the management of the Red Sox at the ball park, watching a ball game. He left his team in Richmond under the guidance of Al Schacht, his chief of staff while he was with the Nats, and hied himself to Griffith Stadium which is owned by his in-laws.

POVICH.

Compared to Cronin, the sphinx is no longer noncommital. Interviewed while sitting in the stands as the Nats battled the Dodgers yesterday, Cronin ventured far out on the limb with such assertions as: It will be a wide-open race in the American League this season, the team that wins the pennant will know it has been in a fight and that anything can happen in baseball.

Getting down to cases, Cronin did speak kindly of the Nats. "It's bound to be the most underrated club in the league, this Washington team," he said. "I ought to know. You can throw that seventh-place finish last year out of the reckoning. We were lucky to finish in the league with all those injuries. If the other clubs start figuring the Nats as a set-up on account of what happened last year, it will be their own fault.

"Give this Washington club pitching and it will be the team to beat, no kidding. Why, outside of his pitching, Bucky Harris is all set. Look at the Red Sox. We've got a first-base problem, a second-base problem and an outfield problem and they don't mention the Nats in the same breath with us when they talk about the pennant race."

Cliff Bolton had just rapped out his third straight hit of the game. Cronin perked up. "Lookit that Bolton, will you?" he said. "There's a fellow who can hit. He'll hit in his sleep."

Cronin noticed the Brooklyn left field playing far toward center despite the fact that Cecil Travis, a notorious left-field hitter, was at the plate. "They don't know how to play this Travis," said Joe. "He's another fellow who can hit in his sleep. There's one way to pitch to him—pitch—and duck.

"Why, if Bucky Harris ever gets pitching, the Washington Ball Club is going to be tough. Every other club in the league is fiddling around with its infield or outfield, or catching, or something, but Bucky's team appears ready, except for the pitching. I know what this ball club can do if it gets any kind of breaks."

CRONIN hasn't played ball for four days. His right wrist, one of the items on the Nats' long casualty list of 1934, has been bothering him again. It's nothing serious, he says. He just aggravated the injury while sliding, but he's ready to play now. About his other celebrated convalescent, Lefty Grove, Cronin was little short of jubilant.

"Grove isn't complaining about his sore arm this season," said Joe, "that's the tip-off that it's all right. I mean when Grove doesn't complain. He cut loose with his fast ball whenever he wanted to the other day down in Norfolk and when he does that he's the same old Grove."

Cronin's still waiting to learn if his new first baseman, Dahlgren, can hit. He's a fancy fielder, according to Joe, but fielding first basemen are a dime a dozen, according to the present quotations. Max Bishop, who has taken off 15 pounds in the South, may be the answer to Cronin's second-base problem, but that's another item on which he is delaying decision.

He didn't mention the shortstop berth which he happens to be playing himself, but he became real excited, no kidding, at the mention of Werber. "The best infielder in baseball, bar none," he said. "If I had a Werber on the right side of my infield, we'd probably win the pennant."

There's a young kid named Mel Almeda, only 21 years old, who has broken into the Red Sox outfield because he shows definite signs of being able to hit. There's no question about his fielding. He'll play along side either Dusty Cooke or Julius Solters in left field and Carl Reynolds in right. Reynolds is the perennial spring-hitting flash again. Cronin, who wouldn't speak harshly of the Lindbergh kidnaper, stunned everybody last summer by predicting Reynolds would "fold" before the season ended. Reynolds didn't and Joe now is hoping he had the guy all wrong.

Roman Coliseum Is Ideal Spot For Title Fight, Says Gallico

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 10.—The most curious things seem to affect the heavyweight championship. Now it seems to be the rate of exchange. Europe, for the first time in the history of professional boxing, seems to have money to spend on prize fights. They can pay the American heavyweight champion of the world in 60-cent dollars and pocket the other 40 cents.

The $300,000 offered to Max Baer as a guarantee to fight Max Schmeling in Europe is only $180,000 in Italy and Germany, and still less in France. Only in England is there an even exchange of money, with the dollar having, perhaps, a few pennies the best of it. The admission prices in Italy would be in lira—and plenty of them. For the first time a European promoter can make money on a prize fight in Europe.

Italy unquestionably would be the place to hold the fight, because the Italians are absolutely sports mad. It would not be necessary to have an Italian fighting for the championship to draw the customers. The heavyweight championship of the world, with a peek at the man who knocked out their own champion, would draw from 100,000 to 150,000 persons. There is no fit place in or about Rome where such a fight could be held—except one, about which I will tell you shortly.

The new Mussolini Sports Stadium is strictly a track-and-field stadium and will seat no more than 20,000 people. The Staido P. N. F. (National Fascist Stadium) would seat 50,000 for a fight in a pinch, which isn't nearly enough. But plans, blue prints and models are all set and ready to be put into an execution for a new Olympic stadium to seat 150,000 should Italy be awarded the Olympic games for 1936.

Of course, such a stadium could

Whitehill Hit By Ball, But Will Pitch

Struck in Jaw During Drill; Will Hurl Today in Dodger Game.

EARL WHITEHILL proved his ability to "take it" in the best approved prize-ring manner yesterday, but the proof entailed a badly swollen and bruised jaw.

The Nats' No. 1 southpaw pitcher was standing innocently on first base before yesterday's game with the Dodgers, watching the batting practice, when all went black for an instant and later blended with blue in the vicinity of his lower jaw.

Shortstop Red Kress fielded a ball and whipped it to first base when he mistook Whitehill for First Baseman Joe Kuhel. Unaware of the throw, Whitehill was advised of it by a sickening thud against his jaw where the ball hit him on the fly.

Stays on His Feet.

Whitehill clasped his hands to his face, but stayed on his feet despite the force of Kress' throw. An examination by Mike Martin, the Nats' rubber, revealed only a large lump and bruises caused by the ball's stitches. An inch higher and his teeth would have been loosened. He will pitch today in the second game of the series with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

On Whitehill's efforts today will depend Bucky Harris' choice of pitchers for the opening game of the season here on Tuesday. If Whitehill is impressive against the Dodgers, he will receive the nomination. The alternate will be Bobby Burke, who will receive a final test here tomorrow against the Phillies.

Bucky Harris yesterday reiterated his confidence in Henry Coppola despite the young Italian right-hander's wildness in the opening inning against the Dodgers when he walked four men, unloosed a wild pitch and allowed two hits and three runs.

"I was a bit disappointed, but not discouraged," said Harris. "Did you see the way he settled down after that first inning? His fast ball had 'em popping up when they hit it. Don't forget that the kid hadn't pitched in a ball game since last March 29 at Birmingham and that's tough on a pitcher at this time of year.

"You can bet on one thing. Coppola won't leave this ball club. I'm going to pitch him again on Sunday at Newark and if all goes well he'll start a game against either the Red Sox or A's here next week."

Berger Is Star As Tribe Tops Giants, 5-2

By the Associated Press.

GASTONIA, N. C., April 10.—Finding Leroy Parmelee for 11 hits, including a home run by Odell (Bad News) Hale, in seven innings, the Cleveland Indians today defeated the New York Giants, 5 to 2, for their fifth victory of their barnstorming series.

In addition to his homer, Hale connected with a double while Bozie Berger had a perfect day with a triple, two doubles and a single and drove in three of the Indians' runs. Oral Hildebrand went the route for the American Leaguers, holding the Giants to eight hits, one which was a homer by Gus Mancuso.

Freddie Lindstrom and Phil Cavarretta each smashed out three hits. The victory was the tenth in the last 11 starts for the Cubs, the other game resulting in a tie.

Michigan Governor Is Detroit Holdout

By the Associated Press.

Lansing, Mich., April 10.—Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald was a holdout today from the Detroit Tigers' opening day ceremonies.

The trouble is that the Governor wants to be the pitcher. The invitation he received from Frank Navin, president of the Tigers, called for receiving the first ball from the delivery of Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit.

"I won't stand up there and let him throw that ball at me," the Governor candidly said of the Mayor. "I'd be willing to throw one at him, though."

District Champ Loses Fight At St. Louis

Saugstedat Is Beaten on Technical Knockout in 2d Round.

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, April 10.—Eddie Saugstedt, Washington 118-pounder, was eliminated in the first round of the national amateur boxing championship tournament here tonight, losing to Peter Giaruso, Loyolo student from New Orleans, by a technical knockout in the second round.

The Dixie lad floored Saugstedt twice and the referee halted proceedings as the District champion staggered to his feet at the count of nine. Saugstedt was the first of four Washington contenders to see action.

Manuel Fuste, of San Francisco, a semifinalist last year, passed his first test by outpointing Benny Lottman, Chicago, in a punishing flyweight fight that had both bleeding.

Advance seat sales before the bouts began totaled more than $4,000, showing a great increase over last year in the same arena.

Bluebeard Is Sold To Mrs. Fairbanks

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., April 10.—Purchase of Bluebeard, W. R. Coe's only Kentucky Derby nominee, by Mrs. R. B. Fairbanks, of Indianapolis, was confirmed today by Hugh Fontaine, manager of the Coe Farm near Lexington.

The price paid for the colt was not announced, but it was understood the contract provides that in event that Bluebeard wins the Derby May 4 Coe is to receive an additional amount.

Mrs. Fairbanks, who recently started a stable, has ten thoroughbreds at Churchill Downs here. Bluebeard was brought here recently from racing at Bay Meadows and Santa Anita on the West Coast, and already is in shape to run. He has made a reputation as a superior mudder but his stamina at more than a mile is yet to be tested.

Harvard Plans To Endow Athletics

President Conant Aims at Ending Dependence on Grid Receipts.

By the Associated Press.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 10.—An endowment plan for Harvard athletics, which he said promises to break the "vicious connection" between football gate receipts and expenditures for sports not self-supporting, was outlined tonight by President James B. Conant to members of the student council.

After pointing out the necessity of removing the danger of another drastic loss of football receipts, Dr. Conant said that the aim of the new policy was to place the entire Harvard athletic program on the same basis as all other university activities, which are largely supported by endowment.

"The president and fellows have agreed," he said, "that they will endeavor to build up during the coming years an endowment fund for athletics, a capital fund, the income of which will eventually become the support of intercollegiate and intramural sports. Gifts for this fund will be welcomed and it is expected that each year the corporation will be able to set aside some money toward this fund."

Budget Is Reduced.

Dr. Conant then revealed that this year's athletic budget, due to the steady decline in football receipts, would be reduced by some $20,000. He said he had been assured that drastic economics would enable athletic director Bill Bingham to keep his department functioning by eliminating only the expenses for a golf team.

During the next three years, however, financial support will be withdrawn from the cross-country, lacrosse, soccer, wrestling, boxing and fencing teams, which now cost about $20,000. Dr. Conant said only a comparatively few students take part in these minor sports and that the annual cost per participant was about $125. He promised that the remaining minor sports, swimming, tennis, squash and basket ball, which interest large numbers of students at a cost of about $18 each, would be maintained for, he explained, these sports are most often continued by individuals after graduation.

"We wish to get away as soon as possible," he continued, "from the vicious connection between football gate receipts and the expenditures for the athletic program. As long as the athletic budget is drawn in terms of expected revenue, all concerned must keep a weather eye on football income. How disastrous such a procedure may be has been eloquently expounded by Mr. Bingham in his recent annual report."

Dizzy Dean Is Cleared By Landis

Newsom Also Absolved by Commissioner in 'Bonus' Probe.

$5,000 Fee Is For Radio Talks, Explains Ace of Cardinals.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, April 10.—Kennesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, raised a warning finger over his gray head today, ruling that no ball player, not even the great Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, could expect to accept money from anyone not connected with his club for anything he did or did not do on the baseball field.

Commissioner Landis made this ruling at a hearing into the money dealings of the pitching ace of the St. Louis Cardinals and Louis "Buck" Newsom, pitcher for the St. Louis Browns, with Dick Slack, a furniture dealer of East St. Loius. Both Dean and Newsom were absolved from accepting a bonus from Slack.

The ruler of baseball was not hard to convince that neither Dean nor Newsom had accepted any money other than for radio appearances on behalf of the furniture company, owned by the East St. Louis baseball fan.

The hearing was the result of a published story quoting Slack as having paid Dean $5,000 to make up

Trainer Merion Saddles Both Horses in Bowie's Daily Double

Sula Breaks Leg After Winning

Vanderbilt Stable Stars Fail at Odds-On in Two Sprint Races.

By Walter Haight.

BOWIE'S popular daily double proved a personal triumph for W. G. Merion, owner and trainer, yesterday. For the first time in the short life of the twin wager hereabouts, Merion saddle the winners of both sections. He made no secret of the fact that the two horses had a chance to take the prize, with the result that tickets on the combination were bought with much confidence and in large numbers. When the pay-off came, it was in lots of $31.60 for each $2 wagered.

Mr. Pete, a horse that had never before tasted victory, was on the front end of the "double." Owned by one D. McVey and trained by Merion, Mr. Pete ran a courageous race to draw away in the stretch under Jockey Fallon's handling. In the third race, Merion's own Deliberate made every post a winning one. Apprentice Jockey Jimmy Lynch gave the juvenile a hustling ride from flag fall to finish.

Has Its Possibilities.

While the daily double mutuel again was small, the third race had its possibilities for those who teamed Mr. Pete with longshots. The combination on In Step would have paid $4,683.50 and John P. W., the longshot that finished second, was a $2,007.20 proposition. Miss Spark would have bought her backers $1,080.80.

A crowd of some 7,000 was present and the racing was conducted over a heavy and sticky course, which kept the times in the mediocre class. However, good mutuel prices prevailed. Favorite players had few chances to cheer as two odds-on Vanderbilt favorites failed them. Tragedy crept into the program when Sula, winner of the third race, broke a leg at the finish line.

Mr. Pete Triumphs.

Mr. Pete graduated from the maiden ranks in the day's opener. The field was one of the cheapest to go postward at this course, but the competition was keen. Jockey Fallon brought Mr. Pete up in the stretch, where he disposed of Evening Chimes, the early pace setter. Happy Easter, well played, saved third money. Mr. Pete's odds dropped from 8-1 to 5-1 just before the horses reached the starting point and he paid an $8.60 mutuel.

The favorite players went down so hard in the second race that they bounced. The Vanderbilt entry of Cold Shoulder and Gum was the consensus of the consensuses and almost everyone within betting distance conceded the race to the pair. But what to their wondering eyes did appear but Gum running an unimpressive third and Cold Shoulder, the Derby candidate, fourth and out of the money.

Sula Is Destroyed.

Sula, from the Shandon Stable, was the winner, but it was an expensive victory for the racing establishment. The son of Sun Flag broke down just before the finish line and had to be dismounted. He was destroyed later. Sula defeated Paradin, a 55-to-1 shot, by three lengths, with Gum another two lengths away. Cold Shoulder, which had made the Vanderbilt pair the favorite at 1 to 4, was never a factor.

Johnny Gilbert kept Sula in front from the start and Paradin was always second. Gum made up some ground from a slow beginning, but his bid served only to save a $2.10 show mutuel for the faithful. Sula was a second choice and paid $13.40.

Winter Sport was the second heavily played Vanderbilt colorbearer to fail. Winter Sport, looking the part of an easy winner at the sixteenth pole, became a victim of the closing rush of Victorious Ann, a coal black daughter of Victorian, winner of the Preakness in the mud. The winner paid $21.30.

Choice Breaks Poorly.

Winter Sport did not break well and appeared to have had too much taken out of him reaching the front. Third money went to Ste. Louise, the pacesetter, for most of the route.

Ilchester, which many had believed had lost his mud-running ability, finally won when the odds were right. At a $11.40 mutuel, the son of Dunlin was not to be denied. Jones had the mount and he received help from Jockey Red Pollard on Alladins Dream. Pollard took up at several points and when on the verge of winning inside the sixteenth pole, he pulled the horse over into the deepest going. Alladins Dream stopped and Midshipman took the place money.

Black Falcon and Jockey Silvio Coucci teamed to take the sixth race for the favorite players. Maddening was second and Infilee third. Horses were little more than cattle. Coucci followed the pace set by Maddening and moved ahead in the stretch. The mutuel was $3.60.

Boocap took the final from Pencader in a driving finish.

Bowie Race Track, April 11.

DEAR AL.

Thanks to the fine riding of Silvio Coucci the Bennings forces escaped a shutout yesterday. For the first time during the meeting we went below two winners. We had a pair of fast seconds, but close is for horse-shoe pitchers, not horse betters. The three-year-old, Sula, was destroyed after winning the second race. The young gelding ran his legs off under Gilbert's riding. It was by far the best effort the horse has shown, but it cost him his life. The break came at the edge of the mutuel board and some 15 yards from the finish, but momentum carried the horse over the line. Sula hardly stumbled. It was just a case of a brittle leg snapping. Horses' legs are that way. There is no flesh to hold them together from the knee to the hoof which makes mending a broken leg a tedious and expensive operation. Sula passed away even before his backers had cashed their winning tickets at a $13.40 mutuel. They do it gently now with a needle, not a gun. But the effect is the same. Sula will be remembered as the horse that beat the Vanderbilt Stable's 1-to-4 entry.

BILL.

First race—Kalola ran a fair race here and off that effort might come through with the first half of the double. The rough track should suit his purposes and Lindberg should be some help. Playfole breaks off the rail under Coucci's handling and is dangerous. Justa Teacher, a cheap one, may go farther this time than last when she set a fast pace.

Second race—Witan is a pretty fair sort at this time. Turned in a sizzler last out and appears to be ready to take care of this field. Bright Don races for the B. B. Sable today and should go well. Hogans Fox moved up stoutly on the far turn last out and may have to be dealt with in the stretch.

Third race—Galla has been moving up to a victory and this seems to offer a spot for the graduation exercises, providing a sleeper doesn't crop up. Stumble is said to be a brisk worker and Fallon may make a bid in the stretch with this juvenile. Free Spirit for the show.

Fourth race—Gifted Lady made a show of her field last out and is the natural choice here. Master Lad, another recent winner, seems headed for the place. Clocker Mike says Fan can't miss. This one came from far back the other day and is dangerous.

Fifth race—Four Spot was kidding us the other day. This one is fit and ready to run. This is a rather ambitious spot but I'm going to take a chance and string along. Manager Bill won his last impressively. Miss Careful is consistent and a keen factor. Mike wanted me to put Slipper King on top.

Sixth race—Sun Abbot appears to be well suited by conditions here. Field Goal and Friend Whitey for the place and show.

Seventh race—Axentea will have Coucci in the saddle and I expect no trouble. Walkalong to place. Don't Blush should be sued if better than third.

White Stars Meet.

The White Star A. C. will meet tonight at 8:30 at the home of H. N. Lear, 368 Wilson boulevard, Clarendon, Va. All players are requested to be present.

MR. PETE, shuffled back when leaving the back stretch, went to the outside midway of the final turn, weaved his way between the leaders during the stretch drive, and was up in the closing sixteenth. EVENING CHIMES improved her position on the outside, made a wide turn into the home stretch, but closed with good courage when straightened out. HAPPY EASTER broke well, but was unable to enter a forward position. VERITAS was used up setting the pace and she tired after reaching the home stretch. BOOCORD challenged strongly at the turn, but stopped badly thereafter. CORA KAY was left safe. EDITH M. displayed early speed.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:07. Off at 3:10. Winner, Shandon Farm's br. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SULA, $13.40, $9.30, $2.30; PARADUN, $51.70, $4.10; GUM (entry), $2.10.

SULA, quickest to begin, opened up a clear lead in the first half-mile, was kept in the better footing, and held away when settled for the final drive. He broke down approaching the finish and was dismounted. PARADUN went closest to the winner from the beginning, but could not menace the winner in the closing stages. GUM, sluggish in the early racing, secured racing room in the last half-mile, but failed to respond when the closing drive came. COLD SHOULDER lacked early speed and was never a factor, passing tired horses. ARDOR went evenly. ROYAL COMMAND did not fancy the footing and dropped back after a furlong. The others were never factors.

THIRD RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:37. Off at 3:40. Winner, W. G. Merion's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DELIBERATE, $5.20, $3.60, $2.90; JOHN P. W., $31.50, $15.20; PLAYFUL TOUR, $3.00.

DELIBERATE, a rapid beginner, sprinted into a commanding lead after reaching the home stretch, saved ground the entire trip, and held JOHN P. W. safe. PLAYFUL TOUR was forced to the outside from the beginning and came courageously under a drive in the final issue. PLAYFUL TOUR broke slower than usual, went wide to reach contention, then came with good energy in the late stages. JOHN TIO made a stout effort when reaching the home stretch, but faltered in the closing drive. MARNAN had no excuses. SQUAWKER weakened steadily after a show of speed in the opening furlong. JAY JAY was never a factor. The others were held safe.

THE DAILY DOUBLE PAID—$31.60.

FOURTH RACE—Four furlongs. The Precocious. Purse, $800; allowances. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:07. Off at 4:09. Two-dollar mutuels paid—VICTORIOUS ANN, $21.90, $6.10, $3.60; WINTER SPORT, $3.20; STE. LOUISE, $3.80.

VICTORIOUS ANN went into the air slightly when the break came, entered contention swiftly on the outside, came extremely wide into the home stretch, but finished in resolute fashion, and was up in the last sixteenth. WINTER SPORT followed close with the leaders from the beginning, raced STE. LOUISE and LEMONY into defeat, then fought it out courageously. STE. LOUISE showed nice speed in the footing while setting the pace, saved ground, and continued with good courage. LEMONY was stoutly handled and held on gamely. FLYING FALCON showed a good effort. BORSA was hard ridden and had no excuses. FAIRISE was unable to threaten. The others could not enter contention.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:37. Off at 4:38½. Winner, E. K. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ILCHESTER, $11.40, $6.00, $3.70; MIDSHIPMAN, $4.40, $2.70; ALADDINS DREAM, $2.50.

ILCHESTER sprinted clear after reaching the back stretch, was steadied in front until reaching the home stretch, came out into the firmer footing at the stretch entrance, but more to the inside all during the closing furlong and barely lasted to win. MIDSHIPMAN moved up strongly when put to a drive, slipped through on the inside of the winner, and closed stoutly while in tight quarters. ALADDINS DREAM responded nicely after being given a breathing spell but lacked room all during the closing sixteenth when ILCHESTER continued finishing on the inside of the first two and Pollard was forced to ease back right at the end. DUNBAR went well for six furlongs, then weakened. BIG SHOW and OLD FIELD were never dangerous.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, driving. Went to post at 5:09. Off at 5:09. Winner, Mrs. H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLACK FALCON, $5.60, $3.10, $2.90; MADDENING, $3.00, $2.90; INFILEE, $5.50.

BLACK FALCON, at home in the going and following in close attendance of MADDENING, moved up stoutly to take command when straightened into the home stretch and had something in reserve at the end. MADDENING was hurried into the lead, raced in the best of footing while setting the pace, but could not resist the winner when placed to a drive. INFILEE moved up willingly on the outside of the leaders and closed gamely under punishment in the final issue. CALORIC saved ground from the beginning, but could not make up any ground. CHEROKEE SAL was held safe throughout. RETRIBUTION trailed far back.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:40. Off at 5:44. Winner, Miss A. Davis' b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOOCAP, $5.20, $3.10, $2.20; PENCADER, $4.40, $2.60; IDLE FLIRT, $2.30.

BOOCAP, restrained back of the leaders until well in her stride, assumed command when leaving the back stretch, remained close to the leaders on rail during the closing drive and had to be shaken up to stall off PENCADER after moving clear. PENCADER entered contention strongly and finished wearing the winner down gradually. IDLE FLIRT was kept on the inside during the early running. She was closed to punishment in the final three furlongs, but failed to challenge seriously. ABSTAIN was hard outrun. BARNEY SEXTON showed speed for two furlongs.

New Race Bill In Virginia Is Planned

McCue to Introduce Plan if Reelected; Heated Battle Forecast.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, April 10.—A renewal of the fight to legalize pari-mutuel betting on horse races in Virginia will be made at the next session of the General Assembly, it was learned today with the announcement of Edward O. McCue, jr., of Charlottesville, that he intended to champion such a bill if re-elected to the House of Delegates from Albemarle County.

He said his bill would conform generally to the measure introduced at the last session by Wilbur C. Hall, now chairman of the State conservation and development commission, which provided for a 3 per cent "cut" to the State and a 5 per cent "take" for horse race associations.

The races would be regulated strictly by a State commission.

McCue's announcement and the fact that horse racing enthusiasts are known to be in support of such a measure led Capitol Hill observers to predict another heated battle in the General Assembly. Hall's bill, they recalled, was piloted through the House of Delegates but died in the Senate finance committee.

Church leaders, aided by several newspapers, attacked the Hall measure and at the hearing held by the Senate finance committee several hours were devoted to listening to arguments pro and con. Proponents said the bill would bring additional money into the State treasury from the tax on racing and in addition would bring property taxes from stables which they said would be established in the Old Dominion.

Under the terms of the Hall bill 75 per cent of the money paid to the State would be used for the operation and maintenance of elementary public schools, while 25 per cent would be paid to the Virginia Association of Fairs for the promotion of live stock and agricultural exhibits at State fairs.

Blair High Is New Name For Eastern Suburban

The athletic record of Eastern Suburban High School, alias Silver Spring High School, goes down in the books as consisting of several baseball games between the scrubs and the varsity, a couple track of workouts, and a tennis team meeting. The name of the school has been changed by the Board of Education to Montgomery Blair High, by which it will be known in the future.

Montgomery Blair was one of the pioneer settlers of Montgomery County and a member of Abraham Lincoln's cabinet. The name will not altogether be new to the school as it was often referred to as Blair High in its former location.

Rival of Furr Rated No. 9 In World

Jannazzo Not a Puncher, However; D. C. Welter Is Now Tenth.

FITFUL PHILBERT FURR, District welterweight champion, and Busy Izzy Jannazzo, of New York, will battle to keep out of the cellar position in the 145-pound rankings in a fist-waving session scheduled for 10 rounds at the Auditorium next Monday night.

Not that it is any disgrace to be in the cellar position in the national rankings; on the contrary. Most boxers labor throughout their entire careers without ever coming within hailing distance of the position allotted the 10 considered the best in their respective divisions.

But, he who loses Monday night's battle will automatically slip into the very last position of the rankings, while he who wins will be in a position to punch his way on to even bigger and better things.

Furr Now Rated Tenth.

Furr achieved the ranking of tenth among the world's welters by his winning performances against Jackie Davis and Mike Frattini here. As Furr was rising here, Jannazzo was battling his way to the ninth ranking by disposing of practically every opponent tossed to him in New York rings.

On the record alone, Jannazzo would stand out as an overwhelming favorite. Within the last six months he has defeated Tony Falco, Stanislaus Loayaza, Murray Brandt, Joe Rossi, Al Cassamini and Steve Halaiko. Kid Azteca, champion of Mexico, who is rated well up among the contenders for Jimmy McLarnin's crown, just barely shaded Izzy in Mexico City.

Jannazzo No Puncher.

Furr's wins over the Frankie Petrolles, Ray Bowens, Bob Wilsons, Sid Dilas' and others do not be rated in the same class with those achieved by Jannazzo. Thus, on the record, Jannazzo should rule a favorite, but many are conceding him no better than an even chance because of one important factor—he can not punch.

In 35 contests he has scored only one knockout, that a three-round finish over one Joe Mulli. Close observers have noted in the past that Furr always works better against boxers than against punchers and for that reason are installing the local lad an even money choice in the early betting.

Dunbar Table-Tennis.

The table tennis champion of the Dunbar Community Center will be decided tonight when players from Birney, Dunbar and Garnet-Patterson clash, starting at 7:30 o'clock. Phillip Butcher, Jack Harlan, Jim Marshall and Carroll Proctor are the favorites.

Sexton Holds Vermont to Lone Hit as Navy Nine Wins, 1 to 0

Tally Scored In First by Schwaner

Middie Mound Ace Fans Ten in Hot Duel With Schwartz.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 10.—Midshipman O. G. Riffin Sexton—whose mates call him "Grandpa"—all but carved a niche in baseball's hall of fame today when he twirled a one-hit shutout game against the University of Vermont, the Middies winning, 1 to 0.

The game was a duel of pitchers throughout, Swartz, of the New Englanders, held the Tars to four hits, two of which came in the opening frame and accounted for the lone run of the game. Schwaner's two-bagger, followed by Tommy King's single, brought in the run.

The tightness of the pitching is better attested by the fact that Sexton fanned ten batsmen, while Swartz was credited with eight. Except in the first inning in only one other frame did the Middies get runners on the paths. This was in the sixth, when Knapper and Schwaner each hit safely.

Fill Bases in Ninth.

Sexton was in hot water on two or three occasions, particularly in the ninth when, with two down, the visitors loaded the bags on an error, a pass and a balk, but a pop fly ended the uneasiness.

Roman Coliseum Ideal for Fight

not be finished in time for a prize fight this summer, although there is a gentleman in Italy who might wave a finger and get it done. He waggles a mighty strong finger and the Italians move awfully fast when he merely crooks it. But the Italians have a place to hold the fight, and I'll bet they've never thought of it. I refer to the ruins of the Coliseum.

What a thrill that would be to see that ancient Roman stadium packed with 100,000 persons for one last great gladiatorial combat. And what a story that would make, the heavyweight champion of the world, an American with Jewish blood in his veins fighting a Nazi German for his title in a foreign country in the same stadium where nearly 2,000 years ago men fought for their lives with the net and trident, the short sword, and the hard-leather, iron-studded boxing gloves of the ancients. It probably would be the greatest sports spectacle the modern world had ever seen.

The walls and the tiers and the foundations of the Coliseum that are standing are in perfect condition, as heavy and solid as ever, and nothing remains to be done, but to clear away the rubble that has filled some of the steps leading to the top and build rows of wooden seats on the rows of stone tiers that rise from the ground to the sky.

Virginia Trims Michigan on Two Hits

Orlin Rogers Tapped for 12 Scattered Blows, But Wins, 4-2.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 10.—Virginia's nine could get but two hits off of a trio of Michigan twirlers today, but they were sufficient and the Cavaliers won, 4 to 2. The first run came in the fifth, when Butler, giant right hander, developed a wild streak, hitting one batsman and issuing three passes in a row, forcing in Carter.

Three tallies were added in the eighth. With one down, Cowgill walked, advanced to second on a passed ball, and counted on Hall's drive to left field. Carter's neat sacrifice put Hall across and Rogers scored on another passed ball.

Capt. Orlin Rogers, ace southpaw for the Cavaliers, was off form due to the cold weather, and was pounded for an even dozen hits, widely scattered. Michigan's first run came in the second frame when Regeczi tripled and crossed the plate on Male's wide peg to first. In the seventh, the Michigan left-fielder again counted when Patchins hot grounder bounded off of Male's knee. Both teams fielded sharply throughout and pretty running catches were made by Male and Williams.

Portsmouth, Va., April 10 (AP).—Besieged by intermittent rain, the Portsmouth Truckers, entered in the Piedmont League this season as the first local bid in organized baseball for more than a decade, will be forced to go into its exhibition series without benefit of adequate spring training.

Manager Horace "Pip" Koehler, obtained by Frank D. Lawrence, banker-sportsman and owner of the Truckers, from Atlanta to pilot the locals, has managed to get three workouts altogether in 10 days and is without the least conception of just how the locals may stack up this season.

R. Dusek Faces O'Mahoney Tonight

Will Seek to Stop Irisher in One-Fall Match at Auditorium.

By George Considine.

RUDY DUSEK—"Rowdy Rudy"—that rough and ready, roisterous roughneck of the rassle ring, who slugs and elbows his way through his chores amid the boos and hisses of the mob, tonight at the Auditorium will fraternize with an Irish gentleman by the name of O'Mahoney. Sure, Danno O'Mahoney. No. 1 contender for the world's championship.

Y'know, this fellow O'Mahoney is a pretty interesting sort of a guy to have around. Not so long ago he impressed Jack Dempsey as being the "swellest boxing find" of the generation. He made the Irish weight-throwing champion look like Mahatma Ghandi. And on top of that, he is allegedly the strongest green-horn ever bred in County Cork.

Victor in All Bouts.

Creating a furore since his invasion of the United States a few months ago, O'Mahoney has failed to lose a single fall in more than a score of performances. Such mat masters as Jim Browning, George Zaharias, Dick Shikat and a host of other cream of the croppers have been readily persuaded to say "Uncle!" The experts—aren't we all—are inclined to give credit to his nonthwartable Irish Whip, a body slam with a high school education.

With the selection of Rudy Dusek as opposition, Washington's legion of fans is asured a first-rate display of color, blood and thunder and showmanship. The fact that the match will be a one-fall affair is decidedly in Rudy's favor. He isn't getting any younger, you know.

In what promises to be a rousing semifinal, Jack Donovan, a 225-pound vest pocket edition of Danno, is slated to lock horns with that pa-lenty tough French-Canadian, Jean Ledeaux.

"O'Mahoney has his Irish Whip, but my Irish Flip is not only twice as good, but fundamentally more sound," says Donovan.

In an effort to round out the evening's debauchery, Pat McKay will work with Sandor (Handsome Harry) Szabo, the reason ladies attend rassle shows, while friend Andy Rascher grudgingly entertains hard-boiled Dick Daviscourt.

Golfers to Vie In Kenwood Tourney

Bowling League's Event Is Set for Tomorrow; Stars Entered.

AROUND 50 well-known golfers representing the ten bowling teams of the District golf clubs will participate in an 18-hole tournament tomorrow afternoon at Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

Emerson Moore, of Manor, and Dr. Tommy Utz, of Indian Spring, guiding spirits of the bowling league, are putting on the golf show, which will be followed by a banquet and entertainment in the evening.

Two teams will be entered from Beaver Dam, while one each will come from Chevy Chase, Columbia, Kenwood, Indian Spring, Army-Navy, Argyle, Congressional and Manor.

Martin F. McCarthy, of Beaver Dam, District "Champion of Champions;" Roger Peacock, of Indian Spring; Frank Reeside, of Chevy Chase; Bill Harvey, of Manor, will be among the golfers entered.

Al Houghton, Kenwood pro, will give a free lesson to beginners at 10 a. m. today in the ladies' day at Kenwood. The more experienced women golfers will compete in an 18-hole penny-a-putt tournament. The Ringers tournament, opening today, took on added interest with the announcement that Fred Fuller, club manager, would donate a trophy to the winner.

Weather permitting, the eight second teams of the District Women's Golf Association will resume play this morning at Manor. Rain washed out the matches last Monday.

Craig Wood, the blond bomber, who lost to Gene Sarazen in the playoff for the Augusta invitation championship, will team with Henry Picard, sensation of the winter golfing circuit, against Walter Hagen and Ky Laffoon in matches Saturday and Sunday at the Cavalier Club, Virginia Beach, Va.

The winning team will receive $600 and the losers $400. Eighteen holes are scheduled the first day and 36 the second.

Since Augusta grabbed the dates planned for the Cavalier Open, the club canceled its tournament and carded the four-ball match instead. Bob Tunstall arranged the match.

Weaver failed to hurry home with the tying tally.

A double by Cuccinello inspired the Dodger's sixth run in the seventh inning, and against Jack Russell, in the ninth, they scored their seventh, aided no little by Lary's wild throw on Reis' bounder.

Against Munns and Mungo in the last three innings, the Nats went out meekly, with the exception of Bolton's single to center in the eighth, his third hit of the day.

Erickson's Dog Wins Stake At Glen

Duke of Rookwood Victor and Regina Is Second; Trials End Today.

A RUST-RED Irish setter with a keen eye to business, Duke of Rookwood by name, scampered off with the blue ribbon in the Novice Shooting Dog Stake yesterday at Glen, Md., as the annual meeting of the National Capital Field Trial Club neared its climax.

Unusually well behaved for a young dog engaged in the hunting business, the Duke carried the day by a comfortable margin, although competition was of high caliber. He displayed good speed and wide hunting range afield and was quick to obey the commands issued by Capt. N. D. Woodword, his handler. The dog is owned by Mr. Erickson.

Regina Is Second.

Regina, a white and liver pointer bitch owned and handled by Dr. E. D. Huffer, won second honors, while Nell's Mickey, a white, black and tan English setter bitch, owned by C. T. Newberry, of Irvington, N. Y., was third in the large and well matched field. Seventeen braces of dogs, 11 braces tried yesterday, competed.

The trials are scheduled to end today with the running of the all-age event at the Hill farm.

The day will be given over principally to judging entries from Harrisburg, Gettysburg and Lykens, Pa. Included in the entries is the well-known Steven's Ben Nugyn, recent winner in the New Jersey trials.

the $25,000, demanded by him, and to "keep peace in the Cardinal family." Dean admitted that he had signed a contract with Slack for this season for $5,000 to be paid for radio services three times a week, and for appearances at his stores on Saturday nights. Newsom admitted the same thing, but did not reveal the amount he was to receive for his services.

The pitching hero of the Cardinals was required to tell Landis who he was and with what team he played. The dizzy one, whose name has been flared in headlines all year, looked up in amazement and replied meekly:

"Jerome Dean, but they call me 'Dizzy.' I pitch with the St. Louis Cardinals."

He ommitted of the U. S. A.

Landis Opens Fire.

"What's this all about?" demanded Landis, as he ordered Dean to pull up a chair in front of the bar of justice, which was a letter-strewn desk, behind which the commissioner presided.

"Nothing to it, judge, as far as I know," Dean replied. "I got a contract with Slack, for $5,000 this season, for radio work and personal appearances at his store. That's all. He's a pretty nice guy, judge. And he's got lots of dough."

Landis reached for the contract Dean pulled from inside his blue double-breasted coat, and then barked:

"Just answer my question Does it interest you to know where 'lots of dough' comes from.

Reads News Clippings.

Then Commissioner Landis read over a bunch of newspaper clippings before him.

"What about this $100 per game for every game you won last year?" Landis asked.

Dizzy said he could not understand how such a story could have been printed. He said he was paid $3,000 last year for his radio work on behalf of the store.

After Commissioner Landis had issued his dramatic warning about the danger of accepting money from individuals outside of baseball, Dean suddenly cut in with this question:

"Say, listen Judge, supposin' a guy comes up and hands you $3,000 or $4,000, what about it?"

Landis informed him that people don't go around doing that. Then he waved his finger over his head:

"If anybody offers you that amount of money 'just for doing nothing,' you kick his teeth in, or promise me that you'll grab a baseball bat and hit him on the head."

Dean meekly replied, "Yes, sir," and walked out. The hearing was over.

Baer's Manager Due to Decide If Champion Will Meet Brown

ANCIL HOFFMAN, manager of Max Baer, is expected to decide within a few days whether the heavyweight champion will be allowed to meet Natie Brown, of Washington, in a six or eight round exhibition originally planned for Chicago on April 26.

Although tentative plans called for the exhibition in the Windy City, the Washington heavyweight made such an impression in Detroit in staying the distance with Joe Louis that Promoters Jim Mullen and Nate Lewis, who stage matches in both the Michigan city and Chicago, are considering moving the Baer-Brown bout to Detroit, if Hoffman agrees.

In a recent conference with Billy McCarney, manager of Brown, Hoffman seemed to favor a four-round exhibition, but McCarney pointed out that only a six or ten-round exhibition would arouse the interest that would come from a comparison between Brown's showing with Louis and against the champion.

McCarney also is considering a proposal to take Brown to England to box in the Wembly Stadium in May. If the exhibition bout against Baer is signed, however, the match on British soil will be postponed a few weeks. While in England, McCarney is hopeful of securing a bout for Brown against Jack Boyle, Jack Dempsey's Irish heavyweight protege. The Doyle-Brown bout would be held in Dublin.

Sandlot Nines' Pilots Dine Tonight

Mattingly Will Preside; Griffith and Harris to Attend.

THE first annual dinner of the Washington Post Sandlot Association will assume the proportions of a convention tonight, at the Willard Hotel, where the officials and representatives of the 16 outstanding sandlot leagues of the District and adjacent Virginia and Maryland counties will gather to make plans for the season. Festivities will begin at 7 o'clock.

Judge Robert E. Mattingly, president of The Post Association, will preside at the business meeting. Clark Griffith, of the Washington Baseball Club, and Stanley "Bucky" Harris, the Nationals' pilot, have also promised to attend and pass on to the managers of the sandlot teams helpful hints and suggestions, acquired during their long acquaintance with the national game.

100 Likely to Attend.

From the responses to invitations sent out in the last few days, it is not unlikely that more than 100 sandlot team pilots will be at the banquet. Under present plans, it is expected that 120 teams will compete this season for the coveted Post Association trophies and miniature baseballs.

This expansion from last year's total of 83 nines was effected by the addition of the Old Dominion and Southern Maryland loops to The Post Association affiliated leagues, now swelling the total to 16. Several more junior and senior leagues have signified their intention of joining within the next month.

The Old Dominion loop of ten teams is an outgrowth of the tremendous popularity of the sandlot baseball sport throughout the near-by Virginia counties last year. This league will operate together with the Northern Virginia League, which carries a roster of ten other Virginia teams.

The following affiliated leagues will be represented: National City, National Capital, Industrial, Departmental, Federal, Department Store, Georgetown Church, Army-Navy, Northern Virginia, Old Dominion, Southern Maryland, Montgomery County, Prince Georges County, District Independent, National City Senior and National City Junior.

Store Stocks Show Strength In Day's Trades

Oils, Alcohols, Tobaccos Resist Pressure but Trend Is Lower.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 10.—Light selling flurries at the beginning and close of the session gave the stock list an irregular appearance today, although during most of the trading period prices were about even.

A few groups, including the department store stocks, oils, alcohols and tobaccos resisted the light pressure at the close, but in other sections minus signs generally predominated.

Some Wall street brokerage houses reported that their customers had been buying department store stock on the assumption that a major part of the $4,880,000,000 of work relief funds would eventually find its way into retail trade channels. The lower priced preferreds in the store group were the chief beneficiaries of the buying movement.

Preferred issues of National Department Stores and McCrory Stores gained around 4 points each, and the two senior stocks of Associated Dry Goods lifted about 2 points. Common stocks of the group were fractionally improved.

Wall street quarters interested in the oils cited the recent weekly reductions in the amount of crude oil in storage as evidencing a better control of production by the industry.

Activity in the stock market was moderately stepped up, with turnover at 990,000 shares. The Associated Press average for 60 stocks lost .3 of a point at 37.8.

Cotton Declines After Advance

Prices Break From 11 to 18 Points, Closing 3 to 6 Lower.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 10.—Further advances in cotton during the early trading were followed by reactions. The close was barely steady at net losses of 3 to 6 points.

The forenoon rise carried the market 5 to 12 points net higher and more than a cent a pound above the low levels of last month. This attracted realizing and liquidation and after early buyers had been supplied prices broke 11 to 18 points from the best, closing within a point or two of the lowest.

Exports today, 5,017, making 3,814,825 so far this season. Port receipts, 602. Port stocks, 2,217,731.

Holland in Strong Position to Repel Further Raids on Guilder; Banks' Capital Funds Now 40 Per Cent of Their Deposits.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, April 10. — The Dutch Government and central banking authorities have been remarkably successful thus far in beating off the latest severe external and internal raid on the guilder, which became particularly intensive after Belgium abandoned the gold standard at the end of last month. The guilder has staged a sharp rally in the foreign exchange market, after it had depreciated by 2½ per cent for cable remittances and by fully 8 per cent for 90-day future contracts at the end of last week.

An analysis of the monetary position of Holland raises two basic questions. First, one wonders why Holland is so determined to maintain the present parity of her currency. Secondly, bankers are asking whether the financial position of this relatively small nation is such as to enable her to keep the guilder on gold in the face of any further speculative raids such as that of last week.

The answer to the first question is to be found in Holland's international economic position. The country normally has a heavy excess of merchandise imports over exports, since it depends largely upon imported foodstuffs and industrial raw materials. To pay for her import surplus, Holland depends in substantial measure upon returns from her foreign investments.

Devaluation Would Cut Investment Income.

The Dutch authorities have repeatedly contended that a devaluation of the guilder would bring about a corresponding rise in the cost of imported commodities. On the other hand, especially in view of the widespread disregard of the gold clause, Holland's debtors would pay their debt service in depreciated guilders, causing a material decline in the purchasing power abroad of the country's income from foreign investments. Also, serious doubts are entertained that guilder devaluation would stimulate Dutch exports appreciably. While a cheaper guilder would enable exporters in Holland to sell more cheaply than they do now to foreign buyers, prevailing import quota, foreign exchange and similar restrictions make a lowering of prices of limited value in expanding exports to many markets.

Holland is the nation of small investors par excellence. Perhaps in no country in the world is so large a portion of the national wealth represented by securities. Nowhere are securities more widely held among the people. Currency devaluation, accompanied as it would be by increases in commodity prices and the cost of living, would be particularly injurious to this numerous rentier class. Recent large scale refunding operations by both the Dutch government and other borrowers in Holland have already reduced returns to investors to unusually low levels.

The second and more important question raised by Holland's monetary problem is whether she will be able to maintain her currency at par. The statement of the Netherlands Bank indicates that institution remains in a strong position. The metallic reserve of the central bank at home and abroad amounted to 834,000,000 guilders on March 25. Outstanding notes amounted to 848,000,000 guilders, while deposits aggregated only 163,000,000 guilders. Thus, the bank had a reserve ratio of 82.5 per cent to notes and deposits, as compared with a required metallic reserve of only 40 per cent. Hence, about 430,000,000 guilders of gold were available for export at the end of last month, and only a small proportion of this free reserve has had to be shipped out of the country since. Speculative attacks on the guilder or withdrawals of foreign funds still remaining in Holland, therefore, could not force the country off the gold standard.

On the other hand, an internal financial panic could be a more serious matter, as the Belgian authorities found. If the Dutch people should lose confidence in their banks or their currency and seek to transfer their funds abroad on a large scale, the gold reserves of the central bank could quickly melt away.

Lack of confidence in the banks was one contributory factor to the American financial collapse in 1933, while to a lesser extent Belgium suffered from the same difficulty before she abandoned the gold standard last month.

Dutch Banks Have Very Small Volume of Deposits.

In Holland, however, the banking situation is one of quiet exceptional strength. The deposits of Dutch commercial banks are relatively small. The ratio of capital and surplus to the deposits of the banks is now almost 40 per cent, as contrasted with less than 8 per cent in the case of the large British banks. The combination of liquidity and such a strong capital position enable the banks to meet readily and easily any calls that may be made by their depositors.

The budgetary situation also is relatively favorable. While large relief expenditures have resulted in substantial deficits during the depression period, the estimates for 1935 indicate that the government is making a serious effort to balance its accounts. The increase in the government's debt has been moderate during the past few years.

If an extensive flight of capital from Holland should be resumed, the guilder would necessarily become endangered anew.

Cleveland Graphite Shares Are Offered

New York, April 10.—The Cleveland Graphite Bronze Co., one of the country's leading manufacturers of engine bearings for the automotive industry, has completed arrangements for a wider distribution of its shares which heretofore have been closely held. An offering of 20,000 shares of common stock which has been registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, is being made through F. The offering does not represent new financing by the company. The 20,000 shares initially offered have been tendered to the underwriters by stockholders, all of whom have been invited to contribute shares on the same basis.

Factory Wages Total 14% Up Over Last Year

Major Industry Gains in Many Cases More Than Seasonal.

New York, April 10.—Extending the gain of the two previous months, factory pay rolls rose to a new high for the recovery movement in February, according to the Business Conditions Weekly of the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The rise of 7.8 per cent in February over January was with the exception of 1934, the greatest reported for this period, since 1919, comparing with the average seasonal rise of 3.4 per cent.

The index in February was 69.1 as compared with 64.1 in the previous month, 60.6 a year ago, 67.3 the previous recovery peak, in April, 1934, and 37.1, the depression's low, in March, 1933. Thus, factory pay rolls in February were 14.0 per cent above a year ago, 2.7 per cent above the previous high and 86.3 per cent above the depression's low.

Men's Clothing Active.

The trend in the major industries was upward in February and, in many cases, the gains reported were greater than seasonal. Men's clothing factories registered a gain of 25.9 per cent, while the women's plants increased pay rolls 15.8 per cent. The automobile industry continued to expand at a rapid rate, reflected by the gain of 19.7 per cent in pay rolls with the steel industry not far behind with an increase of 18.3 per cent.

The lumber saw mills, previously in a state of curtailment, reported a rise of 12.1 per cent in pay rolls in February. While textiles continued to expand operations, the rate of increase slowed down noticeably. Cotton mills showed a rise of 1.2 per cent in pay rolls, silk and rayon, 2.2 per cent and woolen and worsted mills, 2.4 per cent. Shoe plants registered a seasonal rise of 9.2 per cent, but failed to equal the level of a year ago by 2.2 per cent.

Foreign Wheat Purchases Lift Price 3 Cents; Other Grains Rise

War Significance Is Denied From Abroad; September Delivery at Record for Season; Corn, Oats and Provisions Advance.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 10.—Broad general speculative buying on a scale not witnessed before in weeks led to higher prices here today on all grains, especially wheat.

Big purchasing of wheat for Italy from France attracted sharp notice, and in some quarters was construed as of possible warlike significance. Dust storms of exceptional severity Southwest and West counted also as a stimulating factor, and so, too, did Washington announcement that the domestic price of silver would be advanced in accord with upturns of world silver quotations.

Wheat scored a maximum rise of 3 cents a bushel and closed strong, 1½ to 2½ up over yesterday's finish. May 96¾ to 96⅞; corn, ⅜ to 1 cent up, May, 88⅛ to 88¼; oats, ⅛ to 1⅜ advance, and provisions showing 2 cents to 12 cents gain.

New High Record.

A new high price record for the season was established for September delivery of wheat, with nearby deliveries reaching the topmost level since December 15. Considerable evening up of accounts took place in preparation for the United States Government crop report issued after the close of today's trading. This report indicated domestic farm reserves of wheat is totaling but 94,000,000 bushels against 116,000,000 a year ago and 183,000,00 in 1933.

Profit-taking sales on wheat price advances were heavy, but for the most part were soon absorbed. Word from Washington that processing taxes on commodities would be continued had a noticeable bullish effect. Little apparent heed was taken of late cables from Rotterdam asserting that Italy's purchases of wheat were to cover an accumulated need for ordinary requirements and were without political significance.

Corn and oats sympathized with wheat strength, although retarded by undoing of spreads between wheat and corn and by arrival of a cargo of Argentine oats in Chicago.

Provisions advanced with grains, despite hog market downturns.

Five-Year Federal Deficit Estimated Over 17½ Billions

New York, April 10.—Estimates of the Federal deficit by fiscal years from 1930-31 to 1935-36 by the National Industrial Conference Board indicate that the total deficit for the five-year period will be about $17,617,000,000. The estimated deficit for 1934-35 is $4,297,000,000, and for 1935-36, $3,892,000,000.

Some measure of the magnitude of this sum may be obtained by comparing it with the increase in the national debt during the World War period. On June 30, 1917, the national debt was $2,976,000,000, and on June 30, 1919, $25,482,000,000, an increase of about $22,500,000, slightly over one-fourth more than the estimated deficit from 1931 to 1936.

Pay Rises Lift Product Costs

Pay Roll Advance of 36% Adds 44.8% Per Unit In 19 Months.

New York, April 10.—Owing to a 36 per cent rise in pay rolls, labor costs in manufacturing industry increased 28.5 per cent per unity of income and 44.8 per cent per unit of product during the 19-month period of production under the codes from July, 1933, to February, 1935, according to the National Industrial Conference Board.

This rise in labor costs occurred in an interval characterized by less production in volume and generally less production in value, the board's report shows.

Additional facts concerning changes in manufacturing during the period July, 1933, to February, 1935, as reported by the conference board, follow:

Production was 6.2 per cent lower in volume, but by reason of higher prices now prevailing 5.8 per cent higher in value.

Employment rose 13.6 per cent.

Man-hours, owing to a decline in production and reduced hours, fell to a point 2.1 per cent below the July, 1933, level.

Output per worker declined as a result of shorter hours.

Comparing manufacturing production in February, 1935, with that of the preceding month, the conference board reports increase of slightly more than 3 per cent in volume and a little over 4 per cent in gross income. The greater increase in gross income was the result of rising prices, the board's report indicates.

Pay rolls, by a rise of 7.8 per cent, represent the most striking advance during February. Volume of production paralleled the advance of employment and man-hours increased 6.8 per cent.

Corporation Reports.

New York, April 10 (AP).—Plymouth Oil Co. and subsidiaries report for 1934 net profit of $670,261 after charges, depreciation, interest, etc., equal to 64 cents a share on the capital stock. This compares with profit of $47,598 in 1933.

The Tennessee Corporation, formerly a leading copper producer, but now specializing in the production of fertilizer and sulphuric acid, reports for 1934 net profit of $230,896, equivalent to 27 cents a share on the capital stock. In 1933, the company had a net loss of $96,964.

The Union Bag & Paper Co. has declared a dividend of 50 cents on the capital stock payable April 25 to stock of record April 19. Previously, the company had paid five quarterly dividends of $1 each.

Houdaille Hershey Corporation has declared a dividend of $3 on the Class "A" preference stock, $2.37½ being on account of accumulations and 62½ cents for the current quarter. The distribution is payable April 30 to stock of record April 22.

The Dollar Abroad.

By the Associated Press.

London—Quiet efforts by Dutch bankers to maintain the gold standard in the Netherlands by raising the bank rate did not prevent further offerings today of guilders by speculators. The guilder rate weakened to 7.23 to the pound, from which it recovered to close at 7.19 as compared to yesterday's close of 7.17¾.

Other gold currencies closed lower, the French franc closing at 73.56 to the pound as compared to yesterday's close of 73.36. The United States dollar lost 1 cent to the pound as compared to the overnight New York rate of 4.84 to the pound, closing at 4.85.

Bankruptcy Act Applications Up

856 Firms Have Asked Relief Since Law Went into Effect Last June.

New York, April 10.—Applications for relief under section 77B of the new bankruptcy act for the first quarter of 1935, showed an increase over the two preceding quarters. Business failures also were higher for the same period, but this is not to be considered significant as failures usually reach the high point during the first three months of the year.

Concerns applying for relief under section 77B from the date of its inception on June 7, 1934, up to and including the first quarter of 1935, numbered 856, according to reports to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. The statistics of these concerns are entirely separate and distinct from the regular commercial failure record.

The following table shows the number of applications under 77B, together with the total number of business failures for the same period:

Junior Issues Active and Firm In Bond Market

Low-Priced Rails Make Best Gains; Volume of Trading Higher.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 10.—The bond market got back to something approaching normal today when traders and investors returned to existing obligations after neglecting them for several days in favor of new financing.

Lower priced issues were especially active and many were bid up around a point or more. U. S. Governments were a bit spotty, but a good turnover indicated a renewal of intreest in this department.

Transfers aggregated $12,338,000, par value, the best since last Friday, and compared with $9,777,000 on Tuesday. The turnover in Governments was $2,330,000, against $1,520,000 yesterday. The Associated Press averages were unchanged to .5 of a point higher.

While low-priced rail issues made the best gains, there were numerous firm spots among other classifications. Major recoveries were made by a number of railroad bonds, including obligations of Great Northern, Big Four, Baltimore & Ohio, New York Central, Nickel Plate, Pere Marquette, Southern Railway, Texas & Pacific and Wabash, all of which ended 1 to 2 or more points better.

The foreign department was unsettled by a drop of more than 2 points in Italian 7s. Most of the South American issues dipped a trifle and German obligations eased slightly. Poland 6s and Belgium 6s were higher.

Farish's holdings have a current market value of about $2,250,000, and Teagle's, $1,925,000. No salaries were reported for the company.

In the month of March, sales of 26,696 units represented an increase of 14 per cent over February and 47 per cent over March, 1934.

General Motors sales of its Vauxhall cars and Bedford trucks, manufactured in England, and of the Opel and Blitz products, manufactured in Germany, also showed encouraging gains, particularly in the markets in which they are made.

Land Bank 3¼% Bonds Thrice Oversubscribed

New York, April 10 (AP).—It is generally understood in investment circles that between $130,000,000 and $140,000,000 Federal Land Bank 5 per cent bonds were turned in for exchange for the new 3¼ per cent issue before the books were closed yesterday.

This would leave only $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 available for allotment to cash subscribers, who were understood to have submitted applications for more than three times the total amount of the new issue.

Curb Trading Is Conflicting

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 10.—Conflicting price trends prevailed on the curb market today. A number of specialties advanced in light dealings, while quotation changes among alcohols and metals were about evenly mixed. Oils recorded slight improvement, coincident with the better tone for that group on the Big Board. Transfers approximated 187,000 shares, compared with 167,000 yesterday.

Safety Car Heating soared some 9 points in meager turnover. Gains of about a point were shown by Newmont Mining nad Bunker Hill & Sullivan. Recessions of fractions to around a point appeared in American Gas & Electric, American Cyanamid "B," Electric Bond & Share, Hiram Walker, Lake Shore, Technicolor and Pan-American Airways.

Big Industries Use Less Steel

Consumption Decreases 67,000,000 Tons in Five Years.

New York, April 10.—Major industries used about 67,000,000 less tons of steel in the five years from 1930 through 1934 than they did in the five years from 1925 through 1929, according to estimates by the American Iron and Steel Institute. Such a tonnage represents 17 months' production for the steel industry if operated at 100 per cent of present capacity.

Approximately 59,000,000 tons of finished steel have been consumed since 1930 by the construction, railroad, automotive, oil, gas, mining, agriculture and machinery industries. From 1925 through 1929, these industries required an estimated aggregate of 126,000,000 tons.

Total consumption of steel by the railroads during the past five years has been 67 per cent below the tonnage taken by them from 1923 through 1929, while the tonnage of steel used for construction since 1930 has dropped 53 per cent. Since the slump in consumption, begun in 1930, the tonnage of steel used for oil, gas, mining and farm equipment and for machinery has averaged about 50 per cent of the predepression requirements of those industries.

Arts Group to Speed Artemas Ward Statue

The Fine Arts Commission will consider the model of the Artemas Ward statue at its next meeting, April 25, H. P. Caemmerer, secretary, announced yesterday. The statue, a standing portrait of the Revolutionary War general, will be erected at Ward Circle, Massachusetts and Nebraska avenues.

Leonard Crunelle, Chicago sculptor, is expected to submit his model to the commission in person, Caemmerer said. The project is being carried out under a $50,000 appropriation by Harvard University.

Witness Gives Lyddane Probe 'Woman Angle'

Avers That Thomas Told Him of Money Expected From Rockville.

Information received from a volunteer witness yesterday was termed important by Rockville, Md., police, investigating the so-called Lyddane "murder plot."

The witness, Irvin Borrell, 26, of Reading, Pa., is in "protective custody" at the Rockville Jail, after questioning by authorities.

According to Detective James S. McAuliffe, Borrell knows Harry E. Thomas, named as the prospective killer of Francis Lyddane, and John H. "Googy" Carnell, Rockville bartender, who has also figured in the investigation.

Although police were chary about Borrell's statement, McAuliffe said:

"He brought Thomas out here in a car sometime in the last six months. At a later date Thomas talked to him about his mission out here."

"Mentioned Woman."

McAuliffe also stated that Borrell told him that Thomas had said something about getting money from a woman in Rockville.

Mrs. Anne Lyddane has been accused of plotting with Thomas and two other men to murder her husband, Francis Lyddane, and Mrs. Josephine Beall, of Darnestown.

Borrell came to Rockville from Columbus, Ohio, where he had read of the case in the newspapers. He wired Detective McAuliffe that he might be able to give information and the latter asked him to come here.

The new witness, authorities say, has served time in Lorton Reformatory for larceny of an automobile. He has been in Washington frequently during the past few years, police said.

Prescott Challenges Pugh.

A further development in the case yesterday was a challenge by Stedman Prescott, defense attorney and State senator, to State's Attorney James H. Pugh asking the latter to carry out his threat to "knock the block off" Mr. Prescott.

Prescott said:

"I read with real regret the remarks attributed to the State's attorney for Montgomery County that I had attempted to intimidate him and something about him knocking my block off.

"The remark about knocking my block off was a very hasty and extremely undignified remark for a lawyer to make, especially one elected to the office of State's attorney. We all realize that Jim is laboring under the strain of his first important case, but my self-respect demands that I say to him publicly, as I have attempted to say to him privately, that he has only to name the time and the place and ample opportunity will be afforded him to see if his ability be commensurate with his boast."

Investiture Conducted At Western Maryland

Westminster, Md., April 10 (AP).—Members of the senior class of Western Maryland College were invested in caps and gowns here today in the annual investiture services, first of the exercises for the graduating class.

Members of the class and faculty members participated in the processional to Baker's Chapel for the service. The address was delivered by Prof. John Makosky and Dr. A. Norman Ward, president of the class, delivered the invocation. One hundred and twenty-six seniors participated.

"Drunks' School" Bill May Be Reintroduced

Richmond, Va., April 10 (AP).—The Hobson bill, creating an institution for corrective treatment of drunken drivers and inebriates, which failed in the 1934 Legislature, may be reintroduced in 1936.

Delegate Haskins Hobson, of Chesterfield, author of the bill, said today if he is reelected to the House of Delegates next fall he would reintroduce the measure.

"ALL THE FUN WAS GONE OUT OF LIFE"

says middle aged woman

Many women suffer from hot flashes, dizzy spells, nervousness and other annoying symptoms of the Change of Life. They get so blue and discouraged that life does not seem worth living.*

Mrs. Matushek

"All the fun was gone out of life," complains Mrs. S. Matushek of 10907 Edbrooke Ave., Chicago. For five years I was going through a very sad time. I was nervous, had terrible headaches, could not climb stairs and felt swollen. Your Vegetable Compound worked wonders for me. It is a great medicine for any time of life, but especially at the Change and before motherhood. My daughter Lucille used to faint at the office. Your medicine helped her and helped my daughter-in-law too."

"I Had Awful Hot Spells" says Mrs. Harry H. Price of 304 Nos Harrison Ave., Kankakee, Illinois. "The Vegetable Compound puts pep into me and makes my work easy. What they need is a dependable medicine like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Loudoun Is First to Complete Enrollment for Spelling Bee

County Elimination Meet to Be Held at Leesburg on May 4.

Loudoun County, Va., is the first to complete details for the county match in the national spelling bee, sponsored locally by The Washington Post. This contest, in which the best spellers from Loudoun schools will vie for the honor of representing the county in the area finals, will be held in Leesburg High School May 4 at 2 p. m.

Seventeen schools in the county already have enrolled in the contest, each of which will be allowed two spellers in the match, with the exception of Leesburg, which, because of its size, will have four pupils in the interest of fair representation. This means that more than 30 boys and girls will participate, and entries coming in daily will raise the total before enrollments close.

Benefits to Library.

The spelling bee will be of interest throughout the county, not only because all sections are represented, but because the affair will be held for the benefit of the county library. Five cents admission will be charged, and the sum collected will go to the library fund.

Arrangements are in charge of Mrs. Emile K. Windle, acting division superintendent, and officials who will be in charge of the match will be announced shortly.

The winner of the county match will receive a copy of the "Wonderbook of Knowledge" and the second-place winner will be awarded the new "Junior Century Dictionary." Both of these winners will advance to the area finals, where they will compete for a 12-volume set of the "Encyclopedia Britannica Junior" and the four-volume Champlin's "Young Folks Cyclopaedia." Britannicca Junior alone is a prize that is worth striving for, but in addition, the boy and girl winning it will have the honor of participating in the National Spelling Bee.

New Entrants.

Schools which entered yesterday were:

Shenandoah County, Va.—Hammons School, enrolled by Miss Ruth Swartz; Hepners School, enrolled by Miss Bessie Swartz.

Loudoun County, Va.—McGraw's Ridge School, enrolled by Mrs. Mae D. Poland.

Shad Catches Kept Small By Chesapeake Storms

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Heathsville, Va., April 9.—Because of stormy weather, fishermen along the Potomac River near Chesapeake Bay have been unable to fill their traps for several days. It is feared that the cold weather is keeping the fish in deep water and many of them will reach the spawning grounds unmolested. The catch of both shad and herring has been small.

Quite a number of boats from Baltimore, Crisfield and Washington are in the harbors on Coan, Yeocomico and Great Wicomico awaiting the arrival of the fish.

Child's Body Seen In Roanoke River

Believed That of Missing Covington Boy, 4.

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., April 10.—Searchers late this afternoon discontinued until morning efforts to recover the body of a child reported seen floating in the Roanoke River today 4½ miles southwest of Salem.

Henry Bohon said he sighted the body at 10:30 this morning. The drowned child was believed by observers to have been Frank (Sonny) Rose, 4, who has been missing from his home at Covington since March 28.

The child, son of Dr. and Mrs. Garland Rose, was first believed to have fallen in the Jackson River near his home but relatives later advanced the theory he had been kidnaped. A $300 reward was offered.

IF YOUR BREATH HAS A SMELL YOU CAN'T FEEL WELL

When we eat too much, our food decays in our bowels. Our friends smell this decay coming out of our mouth and call it bad breath. We feel the poison of this decay all over our body. It makes us gloomy, grouchy and no good for anything.

What makes the food decay in the bowels? Well, when we eat too much, our bile juice can't digest it. What is the bile juice? It is the most vital digestive juice in our body. Unless 2 pints of it are flowing from our liver into our bowels every day, our movements are hard and constipated and ¼ of our food decays in our 28 feet of bowels. This decay sends poison all over our body every six minutes.

When our friends smell our bad breath (but we don't) and we feel like a whipped tomcat, don't use a mouthwash or take a laxative. Get at the cause. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills which gently start the flow of your bile juice. But if "something better" is offered you, don't buy it, for it may be a calomel (mercury) pill, which loosens teeth, gripes and scalds the rectum in many people. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name and get what you ask for.—25¢. ©1934. C.M.Co.
